A THIRD LETTER of Remarks on Part of Dugdale's Baronage of England.

WE L E, Sir, if I have been thought too severe upon the Writer of the Baronage, the best way to support my Charge, may be by additional Proofs; tho' I thought what had been already produced, might have been fully sufficient. However, it is some Comfort that I have no Occasion to ramble far for new Matter, there being yet a large Nosegay to be pick'd of such kind of Flowers, which I had left behind me in my way, as more than necessary.

I shall therefore now go back to Gilbert the Second of that Name of the Clare Family in England, the Person who was charged with continued Un-faithfulness to King Stephen. (a)

He dying without Issue, was succeeded in his Houses and Lands by his younger Brother Roger, who married Maud Daughter of James de St. Hillary. (b) The Account given in the Baronage of this Roger, who was Earl of Hertford, is very short and imperfect, but pieced out by a long Bead-roll of his Charities, in which, to make the better Appearance, the Author has given him the Honour of one more than belonged to him. He found in the Monasticon, (c) that the Canons of Lanthony had a Moiety of the Church of Bernyntone (which I take to be Berington in Gloucestershire) ex dono Rogeri Comitis, and takes this Earl Roger to be the Man; but whoever looks into the Place cited, will think it strange that the learned Compiler of that Volume should not know that the Earl Roger there mentioned as Benefactor to that Monastery, was Roger Earl of Hereford, who was the eldest Son of Milo Fitzwalter, of whom I have already had Occasion to make Honourable Mention. (d)

Roger of Clare, Earl of Hertford, who died (as our Author says) Anno 1173.

(c) Mon. 2. fol. 71. (d) Fol. 42.

19 Hen. 2d, was succeeded by his eldest Son Richard, who married Amicia one of the Daughters and Coheiresses of William Earl of Gloucester, by whom (e) if you will believe our Author " he had " Issue Gilbert his Son and Heir, and a " Daughter called Rose, who became " the Wife of Roger de Mowbray, and " departing this Life in Anno 1206, " (8 of King John) was buried at Clare.

This is all he says of this Earl Richard, yet in this short Stage he makes a notorious Trip upon plain Ground; for in Truth this Richard had no such Daughter as he mentions. He might have believed Ralph Brook, who says truly, that the Daughter of this Gentleman was Joan, and was married to Rhys Grig, Prince of Demetia, or South-Wales (f) which is agreeable to Powel's Welch History, (g) and that Rose, who became the Wife of Roger de Mowbray, was not Daughter, but Great Granddaughter of this Richard Earl of Hertford, which appears not only by the Evidence of Ralph Brook, (h) but of our Author himself, who says (i) " That the " Mother of Roger de Mowbray for her " Son, and Maud Countess of Gloucester

 " firmation whereof, when Roger should " come to the Age of 15 Years, his Mo" ther and her new Husband, Sir Roger
 " le Strange, enter'd into a Recognizance of 1000*l.* to the Countess of Gloucester, and Bogo (or Bevis) her Son, which Maud, the Mother of Rose, was Daughter to the Earl of Lincoln, and Wife to the only Richard Earl of Gloucester of this Family, who was Grandson of Richard above named, and will require a Place in the Sequel of this Letter.

But we must first take Notice of Richard, who succeeded his Father in the Earldom of Hertford, and came to the Earldom of Gloucester in Right of his Mother. Our Author says, (k) " That " in Anno 11 Hen. 3. he gave a Fine of " 2000 Merks for Licence to marry his " eldest Daughter Amicia to Baldwin
 " Son of Baldwin de Rivers, Son of " William de Rivers, Earl of Devon.

This gives me Occasion to make a short Sally out of my way, to entertain you with some Remarks concerning the Mother of the younger Baldwin, whose Marriage was thus purchased.

She was Daughter and Heir of Warine
Fitz Gerald, and her Husband Baldwin

dying

dying in the Life-time of his Father, left this only Son ; after which K. John in the 15th Year of his Reign (she being a rich Widow) obliged her to marry the memorable Falcastius or Faukes de Brent, a Person much taken notice of by all our Monkish-Chroniclers of those Times, who have been no more able to conceal the Bravery of his Actions than their Spite to his Person, for his loyal Services to K. John and his Son K. Hen. the 3d.

Matherw Paris, and from him our Author Dugdale, (l) say, he was a Norman by his Country, and a Bastard of mean Extraction by his Birth. (m) Norden and some others (n) affirm he was born in Middlesex, near the River Brent, and that his Ancestors flourished thereabout in former Ages ; but whatever was his Extraction, his Services merited Reward, and therefore the King gave him not only the Lady, but the Wardship of her Son, during his Minority. (o)

Falcastius, till the last Scenes of his Life, had with equal Courage and Success, exerted his Loyalty on all Occasions to those two unhappy Princes against their Enemies foreign and domestick, with whom he might perhaps be sometimes more free than welcome. So that he was a kind of Raw-head and Bloody-bones among them. Matthew Paris, through his whole History, discovers such an outrageous Malice against both King John and his Successor, that if he was Historiographer to the latter, as it is said, I cannot but think he deserved a Pillory more than a Pension. So that it is no Wonder, if he has out-gone all the rest in Devilizing this gallant Soldier of Fortune; but it seems Fawkes lay under his Displeasure on a more particular Account.

When Lewis, the French Pretender to the Crown of England, was here, upon the Invitation of the Rebellious Barons, he had made a Visit to the Town and Abbey of Saint Alban's ( where Matthew was a Monk) and had raised a Contribution of 100 Merks upon the Abbey. Perhaps Falcarius might think those Religious had shewn too much Complaisance upon this Occasion; whereupon he soon after, with a strong Party, enters the Town, and forces the Abbey to a Composition of 100 Pounds: And not only so, but he had done the Monks some other Damage, having made a Pond at Luton (p) in Bedfordshire, by which

some of their Lands there had been over-flowed. You know, Sir, all our Monkish Historians are stuffed with Dreams and Visions, Prodigies, and Miracles ad nauseam. Not that they believed those ridiculous Stories, themselves; which, I really think they could not commit to Paper, without laughing, but by imposing them on the credulous and ignorant, they were made Supporters of their Usurpations upon the Laity. In these pauptry Wares none of them have larger Dealings than the Monk of Saint Albans. These Crimes of Falcastus, therefore, must not escape without some extraordinary Marks of Vengeance. Whereupon Matthew tells a hideous Story of a Dream or Vision of a huge Stone falling like a Thunder-bolt from the Tower of St. Albans upon the Head of this impious Man, and grinding him to Powder. This Fable the Monk is so fond of, that he repeats it in three several Places; but for want of the necessary Qualification of a good Memory, he falls into several Discordances. (q) In one Place, it was the Bishop of Norwich, who was the Dreamer. (r) In another it was Falcastus himself, who was so terrified upon it, that by the Advice of his godly Wife, away he run to the Abbey, and exposed his Back to a good Whipping by the Monks, from whose pious Hands he might be sure of a warm Reception; and in other Circumstances the Stories are so silly, and so different, that the Whole may be reasonably concluded to have been only a Dream of the good Brother, and worth no further Notice.

But our diligent Author was of another Opinion; for he has not only taken Pains to insert them all at full length, with all their disagreeing Circumstances, but has added to them another Relation of the same Matter from Matthew of Westminster, who not only pick'd up this among the rest of his Flowers out of his Name-sake Matthew's Garden, but has improved upon it by an angry Apparition of the Martyr St. Alban, (s) which (it seems) frighted poor Fawkes out of his Wits.

Whatever Stories the Monks may tell, the Man had thus far behaved in such a Manner, that his Virtues outweighed his Faults, and for his Services he had been loaded with Favours and Rewards by his Royal Master; but whether it was through Pride, too great a Valuation of his own Merits, or Envy at the advanced Fortunes of any other, he turn'd short at once on all his loyal Courses, and thereby lost and forfeited all his Estate, Reputation, and whatever can be called valuable in this World.

In the Civil Wars, in the later End of the Reign of K. John, and the Beginning of Henry 3. the Emptiness of the Exchequer, and the Difficulties of the Times, through the Defection of a great Part of the Nobility, had thrown the Custody of the greatest Part of the Castles and fortified Places in the Kingdom, (which were then very numerous) into such Hands as could be best trusted, and several of the great Men had fortified their own Hous-es, with or without Licences from the Crown. In these Places the Castellans govern'd like petty Kings, as if their Submission and Obedience to the Sovereign were at their own Election. K. Henry could not number above 10 or 11 Years of his Age, (too early to have given any great Cause of Offence) and the Earl Marshall, Guardian of the King and Kingdom, acted with great Honour and Conduct. He could not but think it time to look about him, and provide for his own Safety, as well as for the King's and the publick Peace of the Kingdom. For these Purposes, the King was advised to call for Surrenders of the Castles into his own Hands; but many of those who had the the Government of them would not easily part with their Hold. Of this sturdy Sort, were the Earl of Albemarle, the Earl of Chester, our Fawkes de Brent, Robert de Vipont, Robert de Gaugi, and several other Barons. Among these the Earl of Albemarle had been entrusted by King John in the latter End of his Reign with the Castles of Rockingham (in Northamptonshire) and Bibam in Lincolnshire; (t) to Faulks de Brent were committed the Castles of Oxford, Northampton, Bedford, and Cambridge; the District of Vipont lay in the North, and Newark Castle, belonging to the Bishop of Lincoln, being by him resigned into that King's Hands, was put into the Possession of Robert de Gaugi.

These Castles they maintained not only by forced Contributions and Plunder of the Country, but by seizing the King's Wards and Escheats, and without question whatever else they could get within their Power. Whether this were not the direct Road to Anarchy and Confusion, I would gladly be resolved by any of the Advocates for the deluding Notions of Liberty?

To reform those Disorders, Robert de Gaugi was the first called upon in a compulsory way; he had not only held the Castle,

Castle, but possessed himself of the whole Town of Newark, and several Appurtenances and Rights belonging to the Bishop of Lincoln, to whom he had received several Admonitions from the King to deliver them, which meeting with a deaf Ear, Robert was excommunicated for these and his other Rapines; after which the Earl Marshall drew an Army together, to reduce this Rebel, who upon the Approach of the royal Forces, burnt the Town, and retired into the Castle, which after eight Days Siege was delivered to the Bishop of Lincoln, upon an Agreement for 100 L. to be paid by the Bishop for the Provisions. But I do not find any Satisfaction made by Robert for the Damage done to the Town; but had the Castle been stormed, and Robert hang'd, as William de Brent was afterwards (tho' but a Second-hand Sinner) it might not only have saved his Life and his Brother's Estate, but prevented the greatest part of the publick Calamities which ensued.

It was not without reason suspected, that Gauge was encouraged and supported in this Enterprize by the Earl of Albemarle and others of that Faction. I am charitably inclined to think, that the Loyalty of Fawkes was somewhat longer-winded, because Men of warm Blood, Blood, like him, are ill qualified for Hypocrites, and he carried a fair Appearance for some time longer.

As for the Earl of Albemarle, he was the next who came upon the Stage in this kind of Warfare. The Siege of Newark Castle was in the Year 1218, and in May 1219, the Protector Earl Marshall died, when the Guardianship of the King's Person was entrusted to Peter Bishop of Winchester; but a great Part of the publick Affairs fell into the Hands of Hubert de Burgh, newly made Justiciary, which created very mischievous Differences between those two Great Men.

At Whitsuntide 1220, the King was crowned a second time, which Solemnity was performed at Westminster by the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, in the Presence of Pandulfe the Pope's Legate, and many Bishops, Earls, Barons, Abbots and Priors, without Number; and the next Day the Barons who were present promised upon Oath to resign to the King's Disposal, the Castles and Wards which were in their Hands, and to account for the same at the Exchequer, agreeing that such as refused shou'd be treated as Rebels. Soon

Soon after, on the 10th of June, the King set out for York to meet the Scotch King, where the Contract was signed the Fifth Day after, for the Marriage of a Sister of King Henry to that King, the Earl of Albemarle and Fawkes de Brent being two of the Great Men, who undertook for the Performance thereof; so that they were still in Favour at least in outward Appearance.

But the King, in his Return, making a kind of Progress, in Hopes to get quiet Possession of some of his Castles, was denied Entrance at that of Rockingham; whereupon he summon'd in the Vicinage, who having been plunder'd and oppres'd by the Earl of Albemarle, were very willing to shake off his Tyranny. So that the Castle was soon forced to surrender; and in like manner the King possessed himself of the Castle of Sanney, or Sanvey, in Bedfordshire, holden by the same. Before the taking of these Castles, which seems not to have been till December (w) he and his Party appointed a Tournament at Brackley, to be held on the Fifth of November. These Meetings had been sometimes encouraged for the Exercise of Arms, and Trials of Strength and Activity; but this and several others, undertaken by private Authority, were suspected as seditious Assemblies to hatch Treason and Rebellion. For this Reason, one of them had been forbidden in the First Year of this King's Reign, (x) and for the same reason was this Meeting prohibited.

The King had early Notice of the Design; for his Writ to prevent it, was dated (y) the 4th of July, threatening Excommunication and Penalties to all those who should assist thereat; but in Defiance of King and Pope, the Earl of Albemarle and his Company went on with their Game.

The following Festival of Christmas, the King keeping with his Court at Northampton, the Earl of Albemarle endeavoured, in the Month of January, to surprize the Castles of Newark, Lafford or Sleaford, and Kimbolton; but being repulsed, he turn'd suddenly to Fodringhay, which Castle being slenderly mann'd and provided, he easily took; after which, upon St. Paul's Day, at that Cathedral in London, he, together with the Earls of Chester and Salisbury, were solemnly excommunicated by the Legate and several of the Bishops. (z)

After the taking of Fodringhay Castle, the Earl of Albemarle returned to his

(z) Annal. de Dunst.

Castle of Bibam, which he fortified and provided by Plunder and Rapine upon all the Country round ; whereupon, by common Consent, an Army was raised, and marching first to Fodringhay, found that Castle deserted, of which Fawkes de Brent took Possession. (a) So that he was a Commander in that Expedition, altho' suspected to be a Favourer of the Earl, whose Castle of Bibam was next besieged, which was surrendered at Discretion the 8th of February, the Garrison all remaining Prisoners, except the Earl who had escaped to Fountains Abbey, from whence he was brought to the King by some of the Northern Barons, to implore the Royal Mercy, which was too graciously extended to them all.

This Year the Castles of Marlborough, Corfe (in Dorsetshire) and Windsor, were surrendered to the Use of the King, who, in his Journey to York, to celebrate the Nuptials of his Sister with the King of Scots, according to his Contract, went round by Oxford and Northampton, the Castles there being held by Substitutes under Fawkes de Brent, and afterwards to Nottingham, from which Places he did not remove the Governours, but put in sufficient Forces of his own to curb their Garrisons.

(a) Annal. de Danst.

In the next Year was the Rebellious Riot in London, headed by Constantine Fitz-Arnulph, in which the loud repeated Bellowings were Mountjoy, Mountjoy, (which was the French King's Word of Battle) and God help us, and our Lord Lewis. The Pretence was to revenge some Assaults upon some of the Citizens by the Abbot of Westminster's Steward and his Assistants at a Wrestling Match there; but their Meaning was sufficiently declared. Serlo the Mayor, and the wiser Citizens, advised a Complaint, and a Demand of Satisfaction from the Abbot; but that was not sufficient. Constantine and his Mob went armed in a hostile manner to Westminster, where they demolish'd and plunder'd the Houses of the Abbot and his Steward, and afterwards, when the Abbot went to Lord Philip D'Aubeni, to get a Complaint preferred of these Injuries, the Mob surrounded the House, carried off the Abbot's Horses, beat and abused his Servants, and he himself privately slipping out at a back Door, and getting into a Boat, was pelted with Showers of Stones; so that it was with much Difficulty he escaped. (b)

The Noise of these Disorders coming to the Justiciary, he went with a Guard into the Tower, whither he summoned

(b) Annal. de Dunst.

the Mayor and some of the principal Citizens, of whom Inquiry was made, who were the Ring-leaders of this Sedition? Upon which Inquisition, Constantine and his Nephew, and one who acted as a Herald in his Proclamation, were taken, and being charged, Constantine arrogantly told the Justiciary, that they had done nothing but their Duty, and ought to have done more. After which open Avowry, the Trials could not take up much Time. So that these three were ordered for Execution the next Morning, when Fawkes de Brent carried the Prisoners by Water to the Place of Execution, where they were quietly hang'd, altho' Constantine finding no other Hopes, offered Ten Thousand Pounds for a Pardon, which shew'd no Dishonesty in Fawkes. (r)

After this, Fawkes attended the Justiciary into the City, to apprehend some others of the Rioters, several of whom were taken and severely punished, and the King appointed a Governour over the City, which was obliged to find Securities, and Commute, by the Payment of a large Fine.

Thus far however Fawkes might be suspected, I cannot perceive any good Ground for an Accusation; but soon after (r) M. Paris, 315.

this, the brittle Temper of his Loyalty and Fidelity, became sufficiently apparent.

The King continued firm in the Demands of his Castles and Wards; and I am apt to think, the chief Reason of his being declared by the Pope of full Age, when his Years were about Seventeen, was the better to enable him to take them into his Hands and Disposal, which those who refused to surrender, were to be thereto compell'd by Ecclesiastical Censures.

This heated the mutinous Barons, who instead of giving up their Trusts, conspired to put themselves in Arms, and disturb the publick Peace, to maintain themselves in their unjust Acquisitions. And in the first Place, the Earls of Albemarle and Chester, with Brian de L'Isle, Fawkes de Brent, and others of the same Gang, endeavour'd to surprize the City of London; but being disappointed, they retired to Waltham. (d)

Yet after this open Breach, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and others, who were for healing up the Wound, sent Messages of Peace to them, desiring them to come and be reconciled to the King, to whom they unanimously pretended they had no Designs against him; but that the Justiciary must by all means be removed from the Administration ; who hearing this, laid the whole Blame upon the Bishop of Winchester, called him a Traitor to his King and Country, and charged him as the Author of all the Ills in the Reigns of this King and his Father. To which the Bishop not being behind-hand in his Returns, threatned, that if it cost him all he had, he would remove the Justiciary, and murmuring left the Peſence, with the rest of his Accomplices. (e)

The King kept his next Christmas at Northampton, with great State and Solemnity, where the Mutineers intended to have been ; but upon the King's Preparations there, they turned off to Leicester, where they Puff'd and Swell'd against both the King and the Justiciary. The Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and many of his Suffragans, being with the King, they excommunicated in-general Terms all Disturbers of the King and Kingdom ; after which they sent Notice to the Earl of Chester and his Accomplices, that unles they resigned the next Day into the King's Hands all their Castles and Royalties, they should all be excommunicated by Name, according to the Pope's Commands. Whereupon, out of Fear of the Kings Forces, and the Censures of the Church, the Earl of Chester, and several others came in, and made their Submission and Surrenders. (f)

Yet tho' they had received the King's Mercy, and been restored to his Favour, (g) they could not return to their Duty; they wanted only Strength to put their ill Designs in Execution, in Order to which they applied for Assistance from abroad.

Philip, the French King, surnamed the August, died about the middle of July 1223, and was succeeded by his Son Lewis the 8th, to whom King Henry sent Ambassadors to Demand his foreign Dominions which had been usurp'd by King Philip, and which Lewis, by his Treaty near London, had promised to restore, as it was said, but it does not so appear by the Copies of those Articles. (h) This Restitution was not only denied, but Lewis threatned, that when he thought proper, he would endeavour to regain England, which had been given him by the Barons. (i)

The Truce between England and France expiring in the Year 1224, it was feared the French King would make some Attempts beyond Sea, against which King Henry made the best Preparations he could : But by these Discords at home, he could not in Person go over with Safety, nor send a proper Assistance. So that Lewis made an easy Conquest of a great part of Poitou, and of Rochel it self, which was the Key of that Province.

This Invasion was justly suspected to be encouraged by our mutinous Barons, and soon after it was not only discovered, but publickly own'd by Lewis, that they had entred into Agreements with him, and bound themselves by Hostages and Writings, to put this Country into his Possession, which was thought no difficult Undertaking, by reason of these intestine Divisions, and the King's Youth and Necessities. (k)

Fawkes de Brent, who still retained some of his Castles, was the Man who opened this new Scene of Rebellion here, for which he laid hold of the following Occasion. The Judges Itinerant holding their Assize at Dunstable, several Verdicts were found against Fawkes, upon Actions of Novel Disseisin; the Historians say Thirty, or more; but the King who might know best, makes them amount but to Sixteen. (l) However, more or less, Fawkes hereupon sent a Party to scize the Judges, who upon this Intelligence, provided for their Safety, by Flight: But Henry de Braybroke, one of them, was taken and put into the Castle of Bedford, where he was very hardly used.

The King sending Messengers to summon the Garrison to surrender the Castle, a bold Answver was return'd, that they were not obliged to deliver it, unless commanded by their Lord, because they own'd no Homage or Fealty to the King.

A Parliament then sitting at Northampton, all who had any Sparks of Loyalty in their Breasts were fired at this undutiful Behaviour; the Relief of Poitou was postponed, the King being obliged for his own and the publick Safety, to employ his Arms nearer home; and this was the Service these worthy Patriots did their Country.

The taking of the Castle was unanimously resolved; but first the Spiritual Artillery of Excommunication was play'd against Fawkes and all his Adherents; and the Castle after an obstinate Defence during a Siege of Nine Weeks, was obliged to surrender at Discretion, the 14th of August. After which, Sir William de Brent, Brother to Fawkes, and several others, were hang'd up the next Morning, for for a Terror to such evil Doers. Fawkes himself had withdrawn into Wales and Cheshire. He had had the Custody of the County and Honour of Glamorgan. Llewellyn, Prince of North-Wales, had married his Daughter (which must be by a former Wife) the Earl of Chester was his Confederate, and a close Friend to Llewellyn. He had therefore some Ground to hope in those Parts to raise Forces to relieve the besieged; but there he was again excommunicated by the Bishops of Coventry and Exeter, which defeated those Hopes; (m) for it was thought a Mortal Sin to have any Communication with an excommunicated Person. So that he was the more easily persuaded by the Bishop of Coventry, who made a Journey to him on that Purpose, (n) to surrender himself to the King, by whom he was Committed to the Custody of Eustace Bishop of London.

The Lion being now in the Toils, the next Question was what do with him. He had angered both his new and old Friends, and, which was worst, the Clergy were his Enemies. But there were two Reasons which pleaded for his Life: First, his former Services; the other because he was one of the Pope's list'd Tools, having according to the frantic Mode of those Ages, undertaken the Crusado, and wearing his Badge of the Cross, and thereby being under his Protection.

But it was thought safe not only to pare his Claws, but to strip off his Skin, and between the Temporal and Spiritual Power, he was forced by the Terrors of Excommunication, and Fear of Death, to Sign an Instrument with all Humility and Repentance, to surrender to the King's Pleasure his Castles of Plympton and Stoke-Curcy and deliver upon Oath all his Plate and Money, Gold and Silver, Arms and Horses in England, or elsewhere, of which he had no more left in the World to his Knowledge; (o) which Instrument was dated the Day after St. Bartholemew 1724, within 11 Days after the taking of Bedford Castle. Before which all his Lands and Effects had been seized as far as could be discovered; so that he was reduced to the lowest Extremities of Indigence and Necessity.

His Appeal to the Pope was to be expected; but what could be done, where nothing could ever be done without Money? But further, to forestal his Market in that Court, Sir Godfrey de

(o) Rymer 1. 273.

Craucombe, and Stephen de Lucy were in December following sent thither as the King's Proctors. (p)

In March 1225, by Advice of Parliament, (q) he was banished the Kingdom, being conducted by Earl Warren to the Sea-side, where, at taking Leave, he sent his Duty to the King, laying all the blame on the Incitements he had received from the Great-Men, who served him as such Men generally do their Confederates, at the Approach of Danger. For the Earls of Albemarle and Chester, with the Bishop of Winchester, and others of their Faction, followed the King's Camp, but were so much suspected, that they were not much trusted. (r)

Fawkes proceeded on his Journey to Rome, intending to pass thro' France. Mathew Paris on this Occasion tells another sad Story, that as he was returning into England in the Year 1226, he was poison'd at St. Cyriac in France. And in this, as in most other things, he is followed by his Name-sake of Westminster. (s) But the St. Albans Monk is formally circumstantial in his Catastrophe. " He says, he was poisoned in a Fish Supper; that he was found dead in his Bed, black and stinking, dying

 " End of a wicked Life. (1)

Yet I am apt to believe all this tragical Story is as mere a Dream as the Stone at St. Albans, as will soon appear. But first let us hear what Mr. Norroy Dugdale has to offer upon this Subject, who having very laboriously rummaged over great Numbers of Charters, Records and other valuable Pieces of Antiquity, has among the rest met with Fawkes's Deed of Surrender and Submission; but mistaking the Date, for Bartholomew-Day 1228, which is Four Years all but a Day, later than it was made, he concludes that Fawkes was then at London, and thereupon charges the Historians with a great Mistake as to the Time of his Banishment and Departure; and that soon after this (as it seems) he departed; and having by large Gifts (when he had nothing left in the World) dispatched his Work at Rome, made speed to come again into England, but in his Journey back he departed this Life at St. Cyriac.

(u) M. Paris 336. (u) Bar. 745.

This

This last Scene he borrows from Matherow Paris; but as he had given a Specimen of his Care and Exactness in the Date of the Surrender; he was here willing to make a Proof of his Candour, that the Mistake might be imputed to a little Neglect. Therefore to make his Historian agree with his Record, he quotes him in his Margin Anno 1228; whereas Matherow finishes his Course in Anno 1226, which wilful Forgery will require a large Share of good Nature to excuse.

Had he been so kind as to let us know how he had provided for the Criminal during four Years, from the time of his Rebellion, to the Date of his Surrender, and by what Conveyance, Art and Assistance, he was enabled to go to Rome, finish his Work, and get back as far as St. Cyriac, in 2 or 3 Months, his Criticism upon the Historians might have stood in a better Light.

But I shall pass by all this, and charitably attend poor Fawkes in his Exile (whose Steps, without question, being narrowly watched) he was, upon his landing, seized at Fescampe in Normandy, and detained in Prison at Compeigne by Order of the French King, who could not have forgot the Battle of Lincoln, and other good Turns Fawkes had done him in England. He remained a Prisoner till till he was released by the Pope's Order.

The Annalist of Dunstable says at Easter
(x) which must be about a Year after his taking Leave of England. For by a Letter from K. Henry's Proctors, in the latter end of the Year 1225, (y) it appears, he then remain'd in Custody: So that he could not present himself to his Holiness till the Year 1226, when we find a Speech of his to the Pope (at that time Honorius the 3d) " grievously com" plaining against the King's Justices
" and the Bishops of the whole Land.
" That from the unjust Sentence of the " Arch-bishop of Canterbury and the rest " of the Bishops had followed the Loss
" of his Goods and Chattels, the Murder
" of his Brother, Relations, and Ser" vants, the Ruin of his Character and " Reputation, the Plundering of his " Wife and Son, the Detention of his " Goods and Estates; and lastly, his un" just Exile from the Land which had " been defended by him. He therefore
" supplicated his Holiness, that to him,
" as to his Servant, in Honour of the " Cross, and in regard of his Devotion " to the Church of Rome, he would " procure such Justice to be done for " him, as might manifest his Adherence
" to the Faith, and deter such unjust

Mr. Tyrrell, in his History, has inserted from Waller de Coggeshall, a longer Apology and Petition upon these Subjects (a) which might be at another Audience, or deliver'd in Writing. But Fawkes could not launch the Vessel, for want of something to grease the Stocks, and set her loose: The Popes pretending to be Protectors, not only of the Persons, but of the Fortunes of their Regiments which marched under the Banner of the Cross; and every thing they could get into their Clutches of that Nature, they were sure to take care of. But alas! here could be no such Expectations, and fair Weather was to be kept in England, not to hinder their plentiful Harvests from thence. Nor were the King's Proctors idle in their Sollicitations. However, the Holy Father wrote a trifling Letter to K. Henry in March 1225, complimenting the Proctors, admonishing the King to Moderation, Mildness, and equal Carriage to his Vas-fals,

sals, acquainting him withal, that he had granted some of his Requests, and suspended others by the Advice of his Brethren.

(b)

But to do something more for his poor Servant, he sent a Letter to his Legate in France (c) to intercede with the French King, that Falcarius might peaceably remain in that Realm during his Occasions there (which seems intended to give time for a Mediation in England) to which end the Nuncio, Master Orto, had Instructions, to intercede with King Henry the 3d; to whom likewise many of the Cardinals wrote in the Behalf of the Petitioner. But after all this, the poor Man found his Busines was not half done. For as he was returning homewards thro' Burgundy, he unluckily fell into the Hands of one Anselm de Dinne a Knight of that Country, who had been taken Prisoner in England by Fawkes, and forc'd to pay a good Ransom; for Reprisal whereof he took this Opportunity (probably upon Information from the English Agents) to turn the Tables, and detain his late Keeper. (d)

Upon this Accident Fawkes was obliged to send the Pope's Letter to his Legate at the Court of France; but this being discover'd by the English Proctors, who that Year were de Lucy, as before, and Stephen de Eketon or by Paul Saracenus, a Citizen of Rome; who was for many Years King Henry's Spy, and his Annual Pensioner (e) for which he was a ready Assistant to the Proctors. They who dreaded his Return to England, tamper'd not only with the Legate, to obstruct the Effect of the Papal Intercession with the French King, and with Master Otto, to delay his Voyage to England; but with the Burgundian Knight, to prevent his Enlargement, as it appears by their Letter to K. Henry, sent as I take it, about Aug. 1226, (f) which is well worth reading, as it gives some Light into those dark Intrigues.

However, the Journey of Master Otto was not thereby long delay'd. The learned Author says, " That he humbly besought the King to restore unto Margaret the Wife of this banished Person, all his Lands, and to receive him again with Favour, in regard he had so faithfully served in the Wars, both of him and his Father." Whereas the Request of Otto was, that upon these Considerations he would be reconciled to Falcarius, and make him entire Restitution of his Wife and Lands, and all his lost Goods. Uxorem cum terris & omnibus rebus amissis ad integrum restitueret, are the Words of his Author, (g) to which I should be glad to see the Dugdalian Translation well reconciled.

The King, as he had been advised by his Proctors, (h) shifted off the Matter for further Delay to his Parliament. The Wife perhaps might not be very fond of the Proposal: For she had before desired a Divorce (the Marriage being made, as she said, against her Will) and she had been restored to her Dower from her said first Husband. (i) Nor was Master Otto very warm in his Request, which he press'd no further, but applied himself with more Diligence to his main Business of plundering and squeezing the Country.

How or when Fawkes obtained his Liberty, I know not. Lewis the 8th died in the 4th Year of his Reign, about the 10th of November 1226, not above 3 Months after the English Proctors sent this Letter; and Pope Honorius the Third went the same way, the 18th of March following. The young King of France being a Minor, the settling a Regency met with Difficulties, and at Rome the Election of a new Pope requir'd some time. So that these Accidents, the Delays consequently attending, and the new Interest on these Changes, might cross Fawkes in his Negotiations, more especially in his necessitous Circumstances. But as he had no other Prospect of Hope, he made another Journey to Rome (k) to renew his Suit to the new Pope Gregory the 9th, who in the Year 1229, sent a supplicatory and minatory Letter to the King, exhorting and entreating him " That Falcaius might be restored to all he had lost, tam in Mobilibus quam Immobilibus, exceptis mortuis: " For that if he had imprudently offend- " ed, his former great Merits ought to " obtain his Pardon, or at least mitigate " his Punishment." Which Expostulation had come very unseasonably, if Fawkes had made his dreadful Exit, either in the Year 1226, according to M. Paris, or in 1228, as by our ingenuous Author he is wilfully misrecited.

In this last Year his Necessities and his Wife's Unkindness, had but him upon a Prosecution against her abroad, for Stay whereof we find a Letter of K. Hen. 3d, (l) grounded upon his Forfeiture and Surrender; and that he had no Effects to contest, which probably put an End to the Suit. But there are no Footsteps of him in England in that Year, or ever afterwards.

By this time it appears, that Fawkes found it no easy Matter to dispatch his Work at Rome, where he obtained only these Intercessions, which cost them no more than a Bishop's Blessing. The Venality of that Court, with the Man's Poverty ; the Resentments and Apprehensions of the King and his Ministry, and the Disregard, and more than Indifference of his Wife, made his Difficulties insuperable. What became of him afterwards, and when or where he died, are unknown to me. 'Tis probable he might end his Days in France, waiting the Event of the last Letter from Rome. It is sure he did not long survive ; for in 1230, his Widow Margaret paid 200 L. Fine to the King, to compound for her Expences towards his Expedition to Brittany, for Liberty to receive Scutage of her Tenants, and not be compell'd to marry so long as she had a mind to live Single : Or if she were inclined to marry again, to be free — to take her own Choice. (m) By which it seems as if she was then a new-fallen Widow.

Afflic-

Afflictions being often too heavy to be supported by the stoutest Hearts, it is not strange, if he was crushed by the Weight of his Misfortunes, by which he still remains a terrible Example of Disloyalty and Ingratitude.

But I cannot leave him, without some Notice of another Blunder about him in the Baronage. (n) We are told there, that the storming of Bedford Castle, and hanging the Governour and others, so much enraged Fawkes, that taking Advantage of some Discontents, he encouraged the French to make an Invasion here, vilified the King, &c. for which he quotes M. Paris, 320, and M. Westminister in Anno 1224; where you may pore your Eyes out, before you find any such thing. But you may spare the Search, for you may easily believe, that neither of these Authors could be so silly, as to take an Effect for a Cause, or to say that a later Incident could occasion a former. And you have seen too much of his impotent Condition, after the Taking of Bedford, to think therc could be any Fear of him then.

I doubt, Sir, you are run quite out of Breath in the long Pursuit of poor Falcasius to his latter End; but if you sit down to consider, you will find some (n) Bar. 744, 745.

Difficulty to decide, whether our Author's Accuracy and Candour in making Quotations, or his Judgment in Criticism, has the best Title to your Applause : But let not that take too much of your Time, till you look farther.

Margaret Fitzgerald, the Wife of Falcasius, long survived him. Our Historians date her Death Anno 1252, (o) to which the Baronagian agrees. (p) But soon after, in the same Column, perhaps his Head being full of the Dream, he forgets himself, miraculously raises her from the dead, and giving her a new Lease of 40 Years, a new Husband, one Robert, or William Aguillon (q) if he is right in either, and a Daughter Isabel by that third Husband ; he proves her Death to be in the 20th of K. Ed. the First, by two Records, (r) by which he says it is evident, that she lived to a very great Age ; and so she must indeed if this were true ; for from her Marriage with Falcasius, to the 20th of Ed. is pretty near 80 Years, and she had a Son by Baldwin her first Husband, which Son was afterwards Earl of Devon.

All the Biass of my Inclination for the Credit of Record against History, where they happen to clash, cannot make me believe, that the Lady lived so long. I am confident, if I had the Inspection of these Records, I should find another Person in her place. Dugdale himself says, (s) that Aguillon's Countess held her Dower from Baldwin sometime Earl of Devon, her Husband; but our Margaret was never Countess of Devon, her Husband Baldwin dying before his Father: Whereas his Son and Grandson, both of the same Christian Name, were successively Earls of Devon, and both dead many Years before the Date of those Records. The Wife of the former of these was Amicia, eldest Daughter to the First Gilbert Earl of Gloucester, pursuant to his Purchase; (t) and the Son of Amicia, who was born Anno 1235, married a Kinswoman of Queen Elianor, and died young in the Year 1262. (u) Dugdale says he was poison'd, for which he calls two Witnesses; but they both unhappily fail him, and say nothing to the Fact. (x) But with him ended the male Line of his Family. For my own part, I had rather believe, that the Records concerned the Wife of one of these, or was otherwise mistaken by the learned Compiler of the Baronage, than that an old Woman should die, and afterwards revive, and live 40 Years longer. And would it not be almost as great a Miracle, that the good Lady should be blest with so long a Duration of a Prolific Capacity, as to bear a Son to her first Husband, and almost 60 Years after his Death, should make a third Choice, and produce Fruit to that Bed.

(o) Bar. 250. b. (p) Ibid. (q) Ibid. & 709. a.

(s) Bar. 256. (t) Bar. 256. b (u) Ibid. 257. a.
(x) M. Westm. & Ann. de Dunft.

By the way, I know not how our Author will acquit himself to Isabel the Daughter of Aguillon and the Countess of Devon; for if what he says be true, that Aguillon married that Lady in the 53d of Hen. 3. Anno 1269, (y) and that Isabel, at the Death of her Father (14 Ed. 1. Anno 1286) was 28 Years of Age, she must be born Anno 1258, which is 11 Years before the Marriage of her Father and Mother.

But passing by such small Slips, let me recommend our Author for a curious Nos-trum to preserve old Women without the Help of embalming. We have seen his Art and Skill in one Instance; but Margaret de Ripariis is not the only Wonder we can produce of that kind. Maud, the Daughter of Simon de St. Lis, has been no less obliged to him. She was first married to Robert, the Fifth Son of the eldest Richard Fitzgilbert, and Progenitor of the noble Family of Fitzwalter (z) whom he hath also incestuously married to

Sister of Maud her Mother (a) after whose Death she had a second Husband, William Albini Brito. (b) In one Place he says, she died Anno 1140, 5th Steph. (c) and in another, that she was living, and 60 Years of Age 32 of Hen. 2. (d) about 45 Years after, and about 50 Years from the Death of her first Husband, by whom she had two Sons. But as old as she was then, if the Record did not compliment her out of some of her Years, both these Sons must be born before she was Ten Years of Age. Therefore, as her Years must have been still more advanced, I must believe the Record referr'd to, means some younger Woman. This is certain, that both the Accounts can hardly be true, unless she could be alive and dead at the same time.

I hope, Sir, you will pardon Digressions; for in this Attempt I am obliged to shift to all Points of the Compass, still keeping the Baronagian for my Center. I shall now return to Gilbert the first Earl of Gloucester, and Hertford. Our Author says (e) " that in the " same Year in which he purchased the " Licence of Marriage for his eldest

" Daugh-

" Daughter, he joined with divers other
 " of the Barons, on the behalf of Rich" ard Earl of Cornwal, from whom the " King had injuriously taken the Castle
 " of Berkhamsted, as also in that mina" tory Message which they then sent to " the King, for ratifying his Charter
 " sealed to them at Oxford.

This was not a very grateful Return to the King's late Favour. But this blind Story only disguising a remarkable Piece of History, which we owe entirely to Matthew Paris, and is not mentioned by any other of our old Historians, or Annalists, which I have seen, nor set in a true Light since that time, I beg your Acceptance of the clearest Account I can give of the Matter, as it appears to me.

The Contests between K. John and his Barons, and the manner in which the Great Charter, and Charter of the Forests had been obtained, are very publick in all our Histories of those Times ;
 which Charters being look'd upon as extort'd by Compulsion, and declared void by the Pope, were not much observed in the short Remainder of that Reign.

But, after the Death of King John,
William Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke, who was deservedly chosen Guardian of his Successor and his Kingdom, hoping to appease the Barons, and reconcile them
 to

to the young King, in his first Year procured a Confirmation of these Charters (f) which were again renewed in the Second Year of that Reign, bearing Date at St. Paul's the Second Day of November in that Year; (g) yet after this, K. Henry 3d was again importuned by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and other Great Men, in the 7th Year of his Reign, for a Confirmation of their Liberties and free Customs; whereupon they were told by William de Briwere (one of the King's Counsellors) that the Liberties they desired were violently extorted, and ought not to be observed. To which the Arch-Bishop replied, that if he truly loved the King, he would not hinder the Peace of the Kingdom. The King taking notice of this Emotion, to quiet their Minds, assured them, that as he had sworn to maintain their Liberties, his Oath should be observed. (h)

But it not being well known, either by him or them, what it was they wanted to be at, Writs were issued to the Sheriffs of the several Counties to enquire upon the Oaths of Twelve Men, what were the Liberties of England in the time of K. John, according to M. Paris; (i) but, in truth, the Writs were to enquire what Liberties and Customs King John had at the breaking out of the War with his Barons (k) which was not unnecessary, there being as much Reason to inquire into the Rights of the Crown, as of the People, both which may be easily settled, if the Bounds of either is well known.

In the Year 1225, a Parliament was assembled at Westminster, where they were informed by Hubert de Burgo, the Justiciary, of the Injuries and Damages the King had sustained in his Foreign Dominions, whereby he and several of the Barons were outed of their Possessions. That as the Loss was general, the Aid ought to be proportionable; for which a Subsidy of a 15th from Clergy and Laity was proposed; which altho' there were so many Sufferers, could not be obtained without another Confirmation of the Charters. So that new Charters of Liberties were sent into all the several Counties, and to those wherein any of the King's Forests lay, were also sent Charters concerning the Liberties of the Forests.

In pursuance of the Charters of the Forests, the Wardens were sent into those Counties to summon Juries of (k) Brady App. N. 149.

Knights or Freemen, to walk the Bounds of the Forests, and to set out upon Oath, which were the old Forests, and which were made since the Beginning of the Reign of K. Hen. 2d, and were agreed to be disforested. These Writs were executed, but not without Disturbance, every one using the Liberties as they pleased ; they made Assarts, by cutting down the Woods, hunted the Deer, plowed up the untill'd Lands, let their Dogs run without Lawing, and disposed of the disforested Lands at their Pleasure. So that they did not lose a Tittle of the Charters. (k)

Afterwards the King convening a Council, or Parliament at Oxford, in February 1227, was declared at Age, and shaking off his Pedagogue the Bishop of Winchester, took the Reins of Government into his own Hands, and in the same Council, all the late Charters of the Forests were ordered to be cancell'd and vacated (for which, as you have seen there were sufficient Provocations) and having, been granted when the King was under Age, and not Master of his Seal or himself. Therefore, as they had been usurped without Reason (it was alledged) they ought not in Reason to be of any Force. (l)

(k) M. Paris 324.

(l) Ibid. 336.

Eachard and Tyrrel say, he made void all his Charters of Liberties and Forests ; by which little Change of the Particle of for and, they would charge the King with breaking through the Great Charter ; but the Words of the old Historian are only de libertatibus Forestæ, nor does it appear that the Great Charter was in any manner aimed at.

But if it be consider'd, how these Forest Charters had been obtained, and how abused ; that they were the Price of an Aid to recover these Dominions beyond Sea, which tho' of so general a Concern, were lost, not only by the Negligence, but Treachery and Disloyalty of those who made it their Business to weaken the Crown, which it was their Duty to have supported : Was it any Crime, by the same Power of Parliament, when the King came of Age, to free himself from those Shackles, which most probably had been put upon him in his Minority, by the Management of his untrusty Guardian the Bishop of Winchester ?

Soon after this, there was another Incident which irritated many of the great ones no less than this of the Charters, tho' they might not think it decent to make the same clamorous Use of it, which,

which to go back to the Spring-head was as follows.

During the two first Years of this King's Reign, there was no Great Seal, but all Charters and Grants went under the Seal of the Lord Marshall, the Protector, who was forced to oblige many Men of Power and Interest, and many Ecclesiastics, by beneficial Grants, and purchase uncertain Services at certain Rates, which Grants cou'd not be of any longer Duration than the King's Minority.

In the Third Year of his Reign, a Great Seal was made, and the first Wax squeezed under it, was to a Charter or Act passed by the Common Council or Parliament, witnessed by the Pope's Legate, the two Arch-Bishops, and about Fifty other Bishops, Earls, Barons, and Abbots, that no Letters Patent of Confirmation, Alienation, Sale or Grant, in Perpetuity, should be Sealed with the Great Seal, before the King should come at Age; and if any such Charters or Letters Patent should be made, they were to be accounted void. (m)

The King was of an easy beneficent Nature: Courtiers are always craving, and Church-men never fail to get what they

they can, either by Fraud or Force: So that this was not only a prudent, but a necessary Act to preserve the Revenues of the Crown from being dissipated and squander'd. But notwithstanding this Pre-caution, several such Grants were made, which might have been resumed at the King's coming to Age; but the Grantees were admitted to compound by the Payment of proportionable Fines, which, tho' a Favour, was no small Crime in the King and his Minister, because it brought some Relief to the King's Occasions.

In the Midst of these Discontents, in the Month of May, (n) Richard the King's Brother comes over from Gascoigny. He was then about 18 Years of Age; and the Heat of his youthful Blood and natural Constitution being elated by some military Successes abroad, wh ch render'd him the Darling of the Soldiers, made him a more easy Dupe to the Craf-ty Courtiers.

His Brother the King had bestowed upon him many Marks of his Affection, (o) having among other Favours given him, in the beginning of his Reign, the Honours of Wallingford and Eye, to which, before his going into Gascoigny, (n) M. P. 337. M.W. A.D. 1227. (o) Bar. 762.

which was about two Years before this (as soon as the King, could get a Supply to put an Army in Motion) were added the Earldom of Poitou, (p) and the Custody or Shrievalty of the County of Cornwall, (q) of which County, as a Continuance of his Grace and Bounty, the King, with great Solemnity, created him Earl very soon after his Return, (r) on Whitsunday the Third of June.

All these Obligations were so far from binding the Earl to Gratitude or Duty, that from this last Honour he immediately took a Handle to work up a Rebellion, and fly in the Face of his Brother and Benefactor.

Matthew Paris says, that King John had given a certain Manor to Waleran Teutonicus then Castellan of Berkhamsted which Manor belonged to the Earldom of Cornwall. (s) The learned Author of the Baronage expounds Teutonicus by the Surname of Ties, and Sir H. Chauncey, who frequently grafts his own Mistakes upon those of other Men, improves upon him, and gives the Name of Ties to the Manor; (t) but where the Manor of Ties is to be found, he has not informed us. But by whatever

Name the Manor was called, the new Earl of Cornwal was told (by some who thought the more Mischief the better Sport) that it belonged to that Earldom: Whereupon, without any Application to the King, or taking any legal Course to recover what he might fancy to be his Right, he like a young Man undertakes to be his own Carver, and makes an illegal forcible Entry, commanding the Manor to be seized, till Waleran shou'd make out his Title.

Waleran thus outed, made his Complaint to the King, who resenting this Injury to his Servant, Affront to his Father as well as himself, and Contempt of his Laws, sent an Order to his Brother to restore the Place to Waleran: But the Earl, instead of obeying the Order, went hastily to the King, endeavouring to vindicate his Right, which he referred to the King's Court and the Peers of the Realm (many of whom were in Truth Criminis Socii.) The King could not think this very respectful; and having Right and Reason to expect the Causē shou'd be put into the same Situation in which it was before the illegal seizure, he with some warmth commanded his Brother to make immediate Restitution, or leave the Kingdom. But the other, with the Assurance of one who knew what he had to depend on, refused either to restore the Place, or to depart the Realm without the Judgment of his Peers, and upon these Words abruptly went away to his own House.

After such insolent Behaviour, the King certainly shew'd too much Goodness, or too little Resolution, in allowing him that Liberty, and not seizing him upon the Spot, to prevent further Mischief, and reduce him to a better Understanding. But good Men are not apt to entertain ill Suspicions ; so that probably the King could not imagine how deep the Plot was laid. It was said (which with M. Paris, Burnet, and some others, is a common Salve for a Lie) that afterwards he was advised to seize the Earl that Night in his Bed ; a Method too dark to give any Lustre either to the King's Wisdom, Justice, or Power. And had any such Resolution been taken, it had probably succeeded like After-Wit. For the Earl stole privately in the Night from his own House to Reading, from whence he went to Marlborough to the E. of Pembroke his sworn Confederate, (as Mattbew calls him.) Be pleased to know, Sir, that this sworn Confederate of Earl Richard, was Son of the Great Lord Marshall, late Guardian of the Kingdom, who was the last honest Man of his Family. This was William, the eldest of 5 Sons, all unlike their Fathers and all childless. This had been one of the rebellious Pack in the time of K. John, and his Conversion was purchased in the Infancy of the next Reign, by the forfeited Estates of four Great Noblemen. It was not much above a Year before this he had privately married Elianor, the King's Sister, for which he was not only forgiven, but entrusted with the Castles of Cardigan and Carmarthen; yet forthwith pretended a Voyage to St. Andero in Spain, pursuant to a Vow which he soon forgot, and alter'd his Course intending for Ireland. Whereupon the King wrote him a Letter free from all Acrimony, but not without some Marks of Jealousy, desiring his Return to Court; or if he could not come, to surrender the two Castles. The Event of this I know not; but this good Confederate attended Earl Richard to the Earl of Chester, of whose Behaviour and Excommunication some Notice has been already taken; and when this Triumvirate were met, the Earl of Cornwal sent Circular Letters summoning his Friends, or rather Enemies of the Government. They joined at Stamford, where besides the Earls of Pembroke and Chester, were the Earl of Gloucester, William E. Warren, Henry (as M. Paris calls him, but it it shou'd be) Humfrey E. of Hereford, William E. Ferrars, and William, or rather Henry E. of Warwick; most of whom had been loaded with Favours from the Crown, and yet had given open Proofs of an ungrateful Disaffection; and besides these Earls, there was a great number of Barons, omnes conjurati (as the Historian says) all sworn Confederates, and a numerous Army of their Followers. (u)

This was in July, within two Months or thereabout, after the E. of Cornwall's Arrival in England) and from hence they sent a Rebellious Declaration to the King, that he should forthwith repair this Injury to his Brother (of which they laid all the Blame upon the Justiciary) and that he should without " Delay " restore the Forest Charters sealed, " which he had lately cancell'd at Oxford, or otherwise they would compel him by the Sword to make them " competent Satisfaction. (x)

Upon this sudden Rupture, the King not being so well prepared for his Defence, as the Conspirators were on the Offensive, warded the Blow by a Treaty, appointing them a Meeting on the 11th of August; when to draw his Brother from his pernicious Confederacy, he pacified him by some large Grants of his Mother's Jointure, among which was the Manor of Berkhamsted, and the English Estates of the Earls of Britain and Bo-ligne, whereby he being bought off, his Confederates thought fit to separate, without one Word more of the Charters, as I can find.

But when Kings are forced to buy their Peace from their Rebellious Subjects, they have always an ill Bargain ; because they seldom or never enjoy the Benefit of their Purchase. The Flames of War seem'd for the present appeased, but the King's Weakness was hereby discovered, which gave Encouragement to turbulent Spirits : So that the Discontents which lay for some time smothering, like latent Fires, were easily blown by seditious Breaths into new Flames, which not only ruined the Chief Minister, but miserably scorched the King and Kingdom, and reduced several Noble Families to Ashes.

In this Historical Sketch, I have copied the Drawing of my Original, but have taken some Liberties in the Colouring. My Author, and after him, the whole Herd of modern Historians, seem to approve these Proceedings of Earl Richard and his Confederates ; whereas I cannot avoid thinking them all guilty of a groundless unnatural Rebellion.

To

To form any tolerable Judgment of these Facts, we must make some Retrospection into the Matter of Right. The last Earl of Cornwal before Earl Richard, was Reginald, a natural Son of K. Hen. 1st, who dying in the Year 1175, in the Time of K. Hen. 2<sup>d</sup>, without lawful Male Issue, that King retain'd the Earldom in his own Hands, for the use of his Son John, to whom the County of Cornwal, among other large Gifts, was afterwards granted by his Brother K. Richard 1st, (y) but I do not find he was invested with the Earldom. However he coming afterwards to the Crown, both the Earldom and County, with their Revenues, were thereby immerged.

I must confess therefore my own Blindness, that I cannot perceive what could legally hinder King John from disposing of any Part of these Revenues or Possessions at his Pleasure. He had a legal Power to appoint a Castellan at Berhamsted, and he had as legal a Power to make any Grant out of any other Parcel of the Earldom. Waleran for his Services might be deservedly favoured: And as the Exigency of K. John's Affairs obliged him as well to bribe his Enemies, as to secure his Friends, in this manner, he about the same Time, or soon after, in the last Year of his Reign, granted the County of Cornwal to Henry, a natural Son of Earl Reginald (z) who therefore went by the name of Henry Fitz Count. After the Death of King John, to fasten this Henry Fitz-Count to the Interest of the young King, he had, in the first Year of K. Hen. 3d, (a) a new Grant or Confirmation of the same County, in a very ample Form; but tho' he shew'd too much Inclination to play the Earl, by illegally assuming several disallowable Prerogatives (b) it does not appear, that he gave any Disturbance to the Castellan of Berkhamsted; yet, for his presumptuous Behaviour, he was about 3 Years afterwards obliged to surrender to the Crown the County of Cornwal, together with the Castle of Launceston in the same County. (c)

How the County, or the Custody or Shrievalty of it was about Five Years after granted by that King to his Brother, we have seen; but then, or afterwards, when he was invested with the Earldom, can any one say he could be legally intitled to any more than what was left in the Crown, after any prior Grants, even if any such Grants were only during Pleasure, until they were in lawful manner revoked and determined.

(z) Bar. 610. (a) Ibid. 611. (b) Prynne 3.41.(c) Bar. ubi supra.

But

But after all this Bustle, we have not yet found the Manor which was granted to Waleran, if it was the Manor of Berkhamsted, tho' that and the Earldom of Cornwal had been together in the Possession of the Earl of Morton, and afterwards of K. John; yet neither in his Reign, nor in many Years afterwards, was it united to the Earldom, or made a Member of it.

This Manor was Part of the Jointure of Q. Isabel, the Consort of K. John, in the 7th Year of whose Reign it was held by Jeffrey Fitz-Piers at 100 L. per Ann. and in the Year 1222, (d) about 5 Years before Richard was made Earl of Cornwal, it was in the Custody of Richard de Ripariis, by whom it was surrendered, and Livery was granted of this Manor among the rest of the Jointure of Q. Isabel, to the Use of her and her Second Husband the Earl of March. (e) So that it was never granted to Waleran, and I doubt it will not be easy to find in that County any other Manor which was ever Parcel of the Earldom or Duchy of Cornwal.

After the Manor of Berkhamsted was obtained by Earl Richard by this successful Sally of Rebellion, he chose it for a Seat. His first Wife Isabel, Countess of (d) Bar. Angl. 88.    (e) Rymer 1. 253.

Gloucester, and afterwards he himself, died there. (f) It was settled in Jointure upon his second Wife, Senchia of Provence, (g) tho' he had Heirs Male by the Countess of Gloucester. So that it was not then inseparable from the Earldom of Cornwal. It was afterwards enjoyed by his Son Edmund, on whose Death without Heirs, it reverted to the Crown. And in the Eleventh Year of K. Edward 3d, was settled on the eldest Sons of the Crown of England, and is at this Day Parcel of their Duchy of Cornwal, which was then erected.

It seems strange to me, that in all this Dispute our learned Norroy has never thought of the Manor of Flamsted, (h) which he tells us was granted in the 18th of K. John to Waleran Teyes, towards the Maintenance of the Castle of Berkhamsted. As we find no other Manor granted to Waleran, we may have room to believe this to be the Manor seized by Earl Richard; but Flamsted never had any Relation to the Earldom of Cornwal. It was the Seat of Ralph de Tony, who was in Rebellion against K. John, and might have been an uneasy Neighbour to the Castellan of Berkhamsted. It was therefore seized and disposed of, as above: So that the Pretensions of (f) Chauncey, 574, 575. (g) Ibid. (h) Bar. 470.

Earl Richard seem wholly groundless; but if Right had been on his Side, nay, had his Seizure been legal, how could he have escaped the Stain of Ingratitude and Imprudence? The surprising Suddenness of the Explosion proves that the Mine was ready charged, and only wanted his Hand to fire the Train. And for him to suffer himself to be seduced into such unwarrantable Measures against a kind Brother, and a gracious Sovereign, and to be made the Tool of a Party composed of such as had been Enemies both to his Father and Brother, was a Part so rash and weak, so ungrateful, unnatural, and traitorous, as will admit of no Excuse, but his Youth and Inexperience.

This Piece of History having been handled by the misapplauded Rapin, whom I look upon as one of the most dangerous pernicious Writers that ever dipp'd his Pen in our English History, I shall present you with his Relation of the Fact. He says (i) that K. John having given to one Waleran a German, " a certain Manor belonging to the Earldom of Cornwal, Richard, as soon as he was invested with that Earldom, order'd Waleran to appear and produce his Title, and in the mean time order'd the Manor to be seized. Whether

 " contrary, as if great Injustice had

 " plaint to the King, who without ex-

 " but to have the Matter decided by " the Laws; and to that End offer'd to

I shall go no further with his cook'd-up Story, because it is all of a Piece, a continued wilful Misrepresentation, to throw all the Blame upon the King, and vindicate that unnatural Rebellion. There is a wide Difference between this Ro-mancer, and the Author of the Baronage.
 One blunders on, and means no harm, when he leads his Followers into the Dirt, but the fly Monsieur dresses up his Relations, not according to the Truth of History, but his own partial Imagination, or what he would impose upon his

his Readers, thus seducing them into Pits and Holes maliciously dug for the purpose.

Besides M. Paris, there is not one of the old Historians who takes any notice of this Transaction, which being in it self and Consequences very remarkable, I can give no Reason for their Silence, unless they were ashamed of it, and willing to bury it in Oblivion. As that Monk is the only Voucher, all that is varied from him, or added to him, must be mere Invention. Such is the pretended Summons before the Seizure: Such are the imaginary Reasons why Waleran did not produce his Title: Such is the Story of the Order to the Prince's Officers, and their Address in putting it off till the Return of their Master; as also his apologetic Excuses on his pretended Arrival; all which are groundless Fictions, invented to daub and disguise the Truth by false Colours. He says truly, that this Seizure was not made till after Richard was invested with the Earldom, which was but the 3d of June, and the Quarrel between him and his Royal Brother was on the 9th of July, which must be subsequent to the Seizure. What time could he have to settle his Officers, or to keep his Courts? What time could Waleran have to produce his Title, which was only proper proper in the King's Court? Or had the Earl been vested with legal Authority, how could Waleran be guilty of any Defaults or Contempts to justify the Seizure, which, without question, being unlawful, Waleran had good Reason for his Complaint to the King? Nor did a Fact proved, acknowledged, and justified, require any long Examination, notwithstanding the Monsieur's Objection upon that Point.

By a transient Comparison, it will appear to an indifferent Eye, how he has travestied his Author, and many more such Instances of his Ingenuity might be produced, his whole Work being daubed over with such Tinsel Embroidery to dazzle the Eye of his unwary Readers. I wish some good Hand, in Justice to Truth, and the World, would pick it out, and expose it as it deserves, to which honest and useful Undertaking my Years and Infirmities will now afford little more than good Wishes.

Now let us see how miserably this Story is hack'd and hewed by the Baronagian, which he has repeated in all his Articles but one, relating to the several Earls named to be concerned in it, and all different, as if he thought Variety preferable to Truth.

The

The ejected Person, to follow his several Varieties, was Waleran Teutonicus a Fleming, alias Walter Ties, alias Waleran Teutonic, i. e. Teyes. But in the Cause of the Dispute he entertains you with much more Variety.

He first tells us, that King John (f) had given away the Manor of Berkhamsted which was not so, tho' Waleran had the Custody of the Castle.

In one Place, the Quarrel between the King and his Brother was about a Manor belonging to the Earldom which the King had given away, whilst Richard was beyond Sea (g) in another, the Manor had been injuriously taken by the King, and given to Walter Ties. (h) In the next place, the King took away the Castle of Berkhamsted, by reason of a Dispute between him and the E. of Cornwal. (i) In another, the Difference was touching a certain Lordship belonging to the Earldom, and given by King Hen. 3d to Waleran Teutonicus i. e. Teyes. (k) But in the Article of the Clare Family, as we have already seen Gilbert, Earl of Gloucester is said not only to have joined with the Barons on the behalf of the Earl of Cornwal, from whom the King had injuriously taken the Castle of Berk- hamsted,

Berkhamsted, but also in the minatory Message to the King for ratifying his Charter (not cancelled) but sealed to them at Oxford. (1)

Are not these Discordancess somewhat strange? But is it not wonderfully unlucky, that none of them should hit the Truth? Yet so it happens; for it does not appear, that King John had given away the Manor of Berkhamsted; that King Henry the 3d gave any Manor or Lordship belonging to the Earldom of Cornwal to Waleran Teutonicus, or any other Person, whilst Earl Richard was beyond Sea, or at any other time. Neither did the King take the Castle of Berkhamsted from his Brother by reason of any Dispute between them, or for any other Reason, all the Dispute being upon the Seizure made by the Earl of some Manor from the King's Tenant, to whom it had been granted by K. John, and having never been in the Possession of his Son K. Hen. 3d. Now, Sir, is it not hard upon poor Matthew Paris, that he must be called upon, like a common Knight of the Post, to vouch all these false contradictory Stories. But in the minatory Message before-mentioned, the learned Baronagian has out-done himself. Would not any Boy,

(1) Bar. 211.

who had ever sat upon a Form in a Grammar-School, have known the Difference between Sigillaverat and Cancellaverat, or between Sealing one Charter, and Cancelling a great Number.

But how, in the Name of Goodness, came it into the learned Cranium of this Author, to give the Surname of Ties or Teyes to the German Waleran? You may, in his Second Volume, (m) meet with a Family of the Name of Ties, and another surnamed Teyes, but no such Person as Waleran is to be met with there. I take him to have been one of those Foreigners who were called in by K. John in the latter End of his Reign, when (to the Shame of the English Nation be it spoken) he could not trust to his own Subjects. By him he was appointed Governour of the Castle of Berkhamsted, which after his Death was by Waleran gallantly defended for K. Hen. 3d against the French Pretender, till he had Commands from his Master to surrender; and after Lewis left the Kingdom, he was re-instated in his Command, in which he continued till the Dispute between King Hen. 3d and his Brother.

Altho' he might then be obliged again to yield up his Castle, he still continued to merit the King's Favour. He seems, after this, to have been employed on the Marches of Wales, where martial Spirits were requisite to curb the Attempts of that turbulent People. In the Year 1241, he was left in those Parts by the King, to build Castles, and fortify the most indefensible Parts of the Country ; (n) the Year before he was trusted with the Custody of the Temporalties of the Bishoprick of Landaff, which continued about Four Years vacant, of which he rendered a just Account in the Exchequer ; (o) he was also rewarded with the Castle and Barony of Kilpec in Herefordshire. (p)

The Time of his Death is unknown to me, but he left two Sons, Robert and William, and a Daughter, Alice. Robert the Eldest Son, not only succeeded in the Barony of Kilpec, but inherited the Loyalty of his Father, and was no less intrusted and rewarded. William married one of the Daughters of Hugh Kilpec; of him I have met with nothing memorable. Alice the Daughter was married to Alan Plugenet, who had a Son Alan, upon whom his Uncle, Robert Waleran, in his Life-time, settled the Barony of Kilpec, and other Estates, (q) to the Disherison of Robert Waleran, Son of his Brother William, and right Heir to his Uncle Robert. And thus ended the Family of Waleran the German, without any Relation to the Manor or Family of Ties, as far as can be discover'd by any one but the Baronagian only.

And now to return once more to Gilbert E. of Gloucester, he died in the Year 1229, in Brittany, where he attended the King in a fruitless sickly Campaign, leaving his eldest Son Richard an Infant about 7 or 8 Years of Age, of whom we are told by the Author of the Baronage, (r) that " In the 21st of K. Hen. 3. the King granted the Benefit of his Marriage to John de Lacy, E. of Lincoln, for the behoof of his eldest Daughter; in Consideration whereof that Earl gave the King 5000 Merks, and acquitted to him a Debt of 2000 Merks more." But in his Article of Laci (s) he says, that for this Grant he promised 5000 Merks, whereof the King acquitted to him 2000. Our learned Antiquary here shews himself a very bad Auditor; for this makes a Difference only of 4000 Merks in the Fines to be paid, which are both vouched by one Record. (t) I dare believe the Record was not doubletongu'd; but I think you may as easily bring the Poles of the Globe together, as reconcile these opposite Accounts. However, not to leave them wholly in Confusion, I think the last in Order here, but the first in the Baronage, is nearest the Truth, because 3000 Merks was the Sum charged in the Great Roll of the Exchequer for this Debt upon this Earl of Lincoln. *

(r) Bar. 211. b. (s) Ibid. 102. b. (t) Pat. 21. H. 3. m. 1.

Our Author says further, in the Place last cited " Whereupon he, i. e. Richard Earl of Gloucester, married her, " her Name being Maud, which Marriage being consummated by the King, " without the Consent of the Baronage, " raised high Discontents in Richard Earl of Clare the Father of the same " Richard, and likewise in most of the " English Nobles. (u)

Here are three Blunders in less than Five Lines; for first, altho' the King sold the Marriage, I hope he did not consummate it. I dare engage the young Earl was very willing to excuse him that Trouble. 2dly, The Name of the Father of this Earl was Gilbert, not Richard, not E. of Clare, but E. of Gloucester. And 3dly, The Father of the Bridegroom (whatever his Name had been) was then quiet in his Grave, as our Author must have thought, if Thought had not been absent ; for had the Father been then living, the Son could not have been thus disposed of.

But whence should these Mistakes arise ? Why when you hear, it will still remain a Wonder. His Author, M. Westminster, says thus (x) Rex sine consilio Baronagii maritavit Ricardum de Clare filium Comitis Glovernix Matildæ filię Comitis Lincoln. Unde maxima succrevit indignatio Ricardi Comitis, & fere omnium Magnatum.

This Ricardus Comes, the Author of the Baronage makes E. of Clare, and Father to the young Gentleman, without any Thoughts of what is objected above, or of what himself tells us within 15 Lines preceding ; one of his Bargains between the King and the E. of Lincoln (y) " that Isabel the Mother of this " Bridegroom, surviving her Husband, " (Gilbert Earl of Gloucester) within the " Space of one Year after his Decease, " took to Husband Richard E. of Cornwall (the Person lately so often mentioned) " he might have observed, that this Earl was generally called Comes Ricardus, by way of Preheminence, without any local Addition, altho' the way of naming Earls by their Christian (x) M. Westm. dn. 1238. (y) Bar. 211.

Names, with only the Addition of Comes, was then left off. This Earl Richard, Father-in-Law to the new-married young Nobleman, was, and no other could be the Person intended by the Historian. I doubt your Wonder is not much abated. What pity it is, that the Province of this Doughty Northerly King of Arms, was not removed farther towards that Point, and extended from the South Part of Lapland to the Northern Pole.

“ After this, ere long (says our Author) “ in Anno 1240, upon the 10th Calends “ of June, this Earl (of Gloucester) took “ Leave of his Friends, and begun his “ Journey towards the Holy Land.” How came he so sure of the Day? Why because Earl Warren died that Day. His Author, M. Westminster fays (z) thus: Obiit Will. Comes Warreniae, London. 10. Cal. Junii. Where the Sentence has a Period. Then follows, according to his manner, Comes Gloverniae Ricardus valedicens amicis suis ad iter Hierosolymitanum se accingit, & cum eo multi Nobiles Angliae.

All that I can infer from this Sentence is, that about that time some English Noblemen were preparing for a Journey to the Holy Land. I am willing to believe, for the Credit of M. Westminster, (z) M. Westm. An. 1240.

that

that the Word Gloverniae is an Interpolation of some ignorant Copyist. If you compare this Westminster Monk with his Guide and Namesake of St. Alban's, (z) I believe you will soon be of the same Opinion, and will find, that whatever is said by him or the Baronagian, concerning the honourable Reception in France, and other Passages on that Peregrination, relate to E. Richard of Cornwal, who went to Dover in order to take Shipping, between Ascension-Day and Pentecost (a) which must be near about the 10th Calends of June.

Whether his Son-in-Law the Earl of Gloucester accompanied him, or not, is a Question, for, I think, had it been so, he would have been named by M. Paris, or at least would have deserved a Place in the Margin of the Manuscript of that History, (b) where almost a Score were named of less Note: Nor can I find that he was under any Vow to that purpose, or ever took any other Crofs upon him than that of Marriage, which was not above three Years before: And it is to be hoped he was not so soon weary of that, as to leave his Lady in the Straw, or ready to lye down (his eldest Daughter being born about that Time (c) and when the poor Lady must also have been under a great Concern for her Father, who then lay languishing of a Distemper which ended his Days soon after. (d) Moreover, the E. of Gloucester is said to have founded his Priory of Tunbridge in the next ensuing Year, 1241 (e) which was before the Return of the E. of Cornwall; all which being consider'd, I am apt think some prudent and tender Regards might detain him nearer home.

It may be noted, that the E. of Lincoln who purchased the Marriage of this Earl, had been one of the mutinous Lords, and had newly deserted them, (f) which made the King more willing to oblige him; but might be the true Cause of the Indignation of his old Confederates at the Marriage, and perhaps the E. of Cornwall, who had no Aversion to Money, might have hoped to finger a good Number of Deniers upon such a Bargain. But from a Passage in the Baronage one would imagine the Displeasure of these Great Persons was rather at the Settlement than the Marriage; for it is said there, (g)

" the King married him (the E. of Gloucester) to Maud Daughter of the E. of Lincoln; whereupon he endowed her with a third Part of all his Lands,

" which occasioned a great Discontent

" from

" from most of the Nobles. But this is " only a kind of Dugdalism.

I should have told you in my last, that for the Performance of this Agreement, the King broke the clandestine Marriage, or Contract there mentioned between this Earl of Gloucester and Margaret or Magotta Daughter of Hubert de Burgo. I hope, for the Sake of the young Lady, it went no further than a Contract, tho' she might be ripe for Consummation; for notwithstanding she was born of Hubert's 4th Wife Margaret, Sister to the Scottish King, she might possibly have had the Maturation of 14 or 15 Summers, when her careful Mother was making so good a Provision for her.

But here I am bewilder'd in such a Labyrinth, that I can neither go forwards nor turn to the Right or Left, without encountering new Difficulties. I was innocently going to enquire after this Daughter of Hubert de Burgo, for which I trudge to the House of that Great Man, where I find he had four Wives. 1st, Joan Daughter of William de Vernon, Earl of Devon (already mentioned under the Name of William de Redvers) Widow, as he says, of William de Briwere (b) which I afterwards find to be William the younger.) 2dly, Bea- trix, Daughter of William Warrin of Wirmgay, and Widow of Dodo Bar-dalfe. 3dly, Isabel, one of the Daughters of William E. of Gloucester, and Widow of Geffery de Mandevill, having been first repudiated by K. John. And 4thly, Margaret Daughter to William K. of Scotland. But some say he had a Wife before any of these, Margaret Daughter of Ro. Arsic. (i)

The First of these Ladies Hubert married in the first Year of K. John, Anno 1199, which is proved by a Record of that Year, the same which had been formerly produced by Vincent (k) of an Agreement between William de Vernon, E. of Devon, and Hubert de Burgo, the King's Chamberlain, upon his Marriage with Joan, the younger Daughter of the Earl.

The Authority of this seem'd incontestable; whereupon thinking my self safe thus far, I jogg on to pay a Visit to William de Briwere (l) and there I hear, that he married the same Lady, and died in the Year 1232, 16 Hen. 3. I thought this was odd Work, to marry a Woman to a Second Husband Two or Three and Thirty Years before the first was dead. After this I return to Hubert de Burgo, and meet with two of his Sons, said to be born of the 4th Wife, Margaret (m) to whom he was married in a publick manner in the Year 1221. And soon after, I have the Pleasure of seeing one of these Striplings girt with the Belt of Knight-hood on Whitsunday, 13 H. 3. A. 1229. At which time, if he was born before his Sister Mag, he might, without any reflection upon the Honour of his Mother, be full Seven Years old. I thought it was great pity he came into the World about so many Years too soon, to match the forward Spark mentioned in my last. (n) It would certainly have been a pretty Diversion to our grave Author, to have seen such a Pair of diminutive Champions tilting at each other upon Hobby-horses!

I am not ignorant, that the Honour of Knighthood was sometimes conferr'd on Persons under Age. It was not uncommon about the Age of 15 or 16 Years; but such Knighthood supplied the want of Years, and determined Nonage. Sometimes, as an extraordinary Mark of Honour, this Complement was more early made. Thus we find Henry Fitz-Empress, afterward K. Hen. 2d, was Knighted at Carlisle by his Mother's Uncle, David K. of Scotland, about the Age of 13 Years; (o) and about the same Age,

Alex-

Alexander, Brother to Hubert's Scottish Lady (afterwards K. Alexander the 2d of Scotland) was Knighted by our King John, Anno 1212, (p) these young Cavaliers being supposed sufficiently qualified. But if there was any Truth in the Story, which Judge Thirning, in the time of Hen. 4. had heard (q) of a frolicksome Lord who dubb'd an Infant at the Font of Baptism, I do not think this Piece of Mirth had any Precedent, or was drawn into Example, or that any such Knights of the Cradle were ever made by any Crowned Head.

But I must further observe, That two Grand-daughters of this Baby Chevalier, (r) were married, and a third under a Vow of Cælibacy in the 8th Year of K. Ed. 1. Anno 1280, which was not 60 Years from the Marriage of his supposed Mother : I do not say this was impossible, but it must require early Work for three successive Descents, unless it was true, that Hubert was too familiar with Lady Margaret before Marriage, (s) which I had rather pass by as one of the Calumnies too commonly thrown upon Great Men in Disgrace ; but even in that Case, the Years of the Lady would not have allowed much more Scope.

(p) M. Westm. (q) Seld. Tit. of Hen. 642.
(r) Bar. 700. a. (s) M. P. 377. 515.

Our Baronagian gives the Sons of Hubert to the Scottish Princess, upon the Credit of a Record Anno 44 Hen. 3d, (t) which falls in with the Year 1259, in which Year she died. (u) Dugdale says, that by this Record John de Burgh is found Heir to an Estate of hers; but admitting it was so, this Record, if such an one was, may, like many others of the same Nature, deserve a melius inquirendum. Juries are often partial, often misled, and imposed upon. It may likewise be observed, that after Hubert had surrendered'd to K. Hen. 3d, in the 24th Year of his Reign, many of his Castles and Estates, (x) the King agreed, that the Residue should be enjoyed by him and Margaret his Wife, during their Lives and the Life of the Survivor, without any Entail upon Heirs of their Bodies, which looks as if no such were then existing; by which Grant and a Remainder of some prior Title, some of Hubert's Lands might descend to John as his Heir after the Death of his surviving Relict, altho' John and his Brother might issue from the Bed of Margaret Arsic, or Beatrix de Warren, on whom it is said Hubert begot Sons and Daughters, (y) or of Joan de Vernon.

(t) Ecc. N. 10. (u) M. Westm. (x) Bar. 699. b.
(y) Vincent, 279.

I must confess, all this is only circumstantial; but there are yet more positive Proofs, that these Sons of Hubert did not proceed from the Scottish Princess; for in the 53 and 54th of K. Hen. 3d, Alexander the 3d K. of Scotland brought a Writ of Mortdancester against John de Burgo for the Manor of Westlye, which that King claimed (z) as Heir to his Aunt, which he could not have been, had John been her Son.

It is moreover to be strongly presumed, that had any Heirs of the Body of Margaret survived, at the time of the great Competition for the Crown of Scotland, (whereof you shall soon have a short Relation) they would then have appeared, having a stronger Claim than any of the Pretenders, Margaret being eldest daughter to King William; whereas the Titles of Bruce and Baliol, which were much the strongest at that time produced, were under two Daughters of David Earl of Huntington, younger Brother of William; and this is admitted in the Petition of Baliol, (a) but it is there expressly alledged, that neither Margaret nor her Daughter Magotta, left any Issue.

Yet there was at that time living an Heir of John de Burgh. We have already taken notice of his two married Grand-daughters, whereof Hawise who bore her Mother's Name, and seems to have been the eldest, was married to Robert de Greilly and Devorgill, the other, to Robert Fitz-walter. (b) This latter left only a Daughter: (c) But Hawise had a Son, Thomas de Greilly, who was living at the time of the Great Trial, and was in the 34th of Edward 1st, made Knight of the Bath, with Prince Edward and others; and had he been descended from Lady Margaret, his Claim would hardly have been omitted.

(z) Prynne Parl. Writs, to 1391. (a) Prynne Edw. 1. 516.

This Genealogical Cloud is, I hope, quite dispell'd, and I am no less positive, that Joan de Vernon, the first Wife of Hubert or the Second (if Mills and Brook were not mistaken, (d) who say his first was Margaret Arsic) could not be the Widow of William de Briwere, either Father or Son, notwithstanding what we are told in a Monkish Chronicle of the Founders of Ford Abbey, (e) that Joan the eldest Daughter of William de Vernon was Wife to William Briwers. Whereas, in truth, the elder Daughter was named Mary, and was married to Robert Courtney (f) from whom descended a Race of Earls of Devon.

This

This Blunder of the Monk was no Diminution of his Credit with our good-natured Author, who scorned to take notice of Trifles ; and therefore to reconcile the Chronicle to the before-cited Record of the 1st of K. John, he marries the Daughter Joan first to William Briwere, and after his Death to Hubert de Burgo, not only in spite of his own Vouchers, but of all the Credit of Publick History ; by which it indisputably appears, that the elder Briwere acted in a publick Character during several Years in the Reign of K. Hen. 3. and after Hubert de Burgo had married his 4th Wife, not dying, even according to our Author till the 11th Year of that King, (g) the Son William surviving about 5 or 6 Years after. Is it not therefore more likely, that the Historian of Ford Abbey should be mistaken, who wrote perhaps 2 or 300 Years after the Fact, than that the Current of our Records and publick Histories should club to an useless Fiction ?

The Issue and Descent of Royal Blood being (as I think) a material Part of Publick History, and what relates to the Names, Number and Marriages of the Children of K. William of Scotland, surnamed the Lion, being left much in the dark by the Historians, and no less in

(g) Bar. 702.

Con-

Confusion by the Antiquaries, a little Time may not be mis-spent in supplying the Omissions of the former, and rectifying the Mistakes of the others; in order to which I shall here bid Adieu to the Clare Family, at least for the present. The Historians name only a Son and two Daughters of that King. The Genealogists find several others, but are at Variance in their Numbers, Name, Order of Birth, and other Distinctions. Mills (b) gives him a Son, and Five Daughters, Brook (i) the like Number, but with several Differences; and he again is corrected more than amended by Vincent. (k) Therefore, finding no good Information from them, I have been led into further Inquiries, the Result whereof be pleased to accept as follows.

I find that K. William succeeded his Brother Malcolm (l) in the Throne of Scotland, in November 1165, and died in Decemb. 1214, having reigned 49 Years, and lived 72, John Major says 74; but the first Account seems to square better with the Years of his elder Brother, who died in the 26th Year of his Age.

In the Year 1183, (m) K. William gave his Daughter Isabel (which he had by a Daughter of Robert Avenel) in Marriage to Robert Brus, by whom I think she had no Issue, nor many Years Enjoyment; for about 8 Years after Anno 1191, she was married to a second Husband, Robert Roos of Hamlake or Hemstey. In the Year 1184, K. William married his Second Daughter, Ada, to Earl Patrick of Dunbar, (n) whose Posterity were Earls of the Scottish Marches. Having thus settled two of his Daughters, William came into England in the Year 1186, and married Ermengarde, (o) Daughter of Richard Viscount of Beaumont, who was Son of Roscelin, Viscount of Beaumont, by Constance natural Daughter of our K. Henry the 1st, of whom more hereafter.

In the Year 1193, he matched his Daughter Margaret, or Marjory, which he had by a Daughter of Adam de Hythbum to Eustace de Vescy, (p) Grandfather of John de Vescy, who afterwards married Isabel de Beaumont.

Whether these three Daughters already named, Isabel, Ada, by some called Ida, and Margaret, or Marjory, were born in holy Wedlock, or came into the World by unsanctified Passages of Generation, I am not certain, having met with no Registers of the Marriages or Deaths of their Mothers; yet in the famous Competition for the Crown of Scotland, after the Death of King Alexander the 3d, and his Grand-daughter Margaret of Norway, without Issue, which was referr'd to our K. Edward 1st, in the Year 1291, three of the Twelve Pretenders claimed under these Ladies, which were Robert Ross, under Isabel; Patrick Earl of March, as Grandson of Ada, and William de Vescy, the surviving Grandson of Margaret. Had these Ladies been legitimate, the Claims under them, as Daughters to K. William, were certainly preferable to those of Baliot and Bruce, who deduced their Titles from Margaret and Isabel, two Daughters of his younger Brother, as hath been said: But the easy Dismission of those elder Claims seems to shew the Sense of that Age concerning their Legitimacy.

petition

I therefore take my leave of them, and hasten to pay my Respects to the Children of Queen Ermengarde.

When K. William married her, he was about 44 Years of Age, and could ill afford to lose time; yet it was either long before that Bed was favour'd with the Blessing of Increase, or the forward Blossoms dropp'd prematurely; for his Son and Successor Alexander was not born till Bartholomew-Day, 1199, (q) and I am apt to believe the Daughters were all younger.

These were Three, the Two elder of which were another Margaret and another Isabel, which Parity of Names has been a kind of Pit-fall of Error to our Historians and Antiquaries. These two were brought into England very young, upon a Treaty between K. John and their Father, in the Year 1209, to be educated in the English Court, and to be married after the Expiration of Nine Years to (r) Henry and Richard, the two Sons of King John, of which Henry was then about two Years old, and the other about as many Months; for which distant Marriages the Scottish King paid 15000 Merks, as his Daughters Portions, a Supply not unseasonable to the Difficulties K. John was then under, between a strong Opposition of his mutinous Barons, and the Subjection of his Kingdom to a Papal Interdict.

Whether John was in earnest in the Marriages, or made the Treaty for present Convenience, as a Shelter against any Storms from the North, at that tempestuous Season; or whether a subsequent Change of Politicks impeded the Consummation of the Marriages after his Death (which happen'd within the time limited) they were waved by a subsequent Treaty; (s) upon which, in the Year 1221, K. Alexander the Second was married at York to Joan the eldest Daughter of K. John, and Margaret and Isabel, the two Sisters of Alexander, were to be married to the Honour of both Kings, pursuant whereto Margaret was then married to Hubert de Burgo.

Her younger Sister, Isabel (t) (who by some is made the first born of all the Daughters of K. William) staid some time longer for a Husband, for she return'd unmarried out of the Custody of K. Hen. the 3d into Scotland. " In the Year 1223
 " (u) Dr. Abercrombie says, (x) the King
 " very much affected her, and would " have married her; but being by some " Reasons of State diverted from that " Design, he gave her to Gilbert Earl
 " Marshall, one of the noble Predeces" sors of the first English Peer now in " being, his Grace the Duke of Norfolk.
 Should not the Doctor have considered, that Gilbert Marshall died without Issue?

Neither was Isabel married to Gilbert Earl Marshall (as he calls him) which is a Mistake whereof he and I have been both guilty; for it was 150 Years after this, before the Title of Earl was annexed to the Office of Mareschal; but that Office did indeed fall to her Husband, a few Years before his Decease. This was Roger Bigot, Son of Hugh Bigot, Earl of Norfolk, by his Wife Maud, who was eldest Daughter of William Mareschall Earl of Pembroke; which Hugh dying in the 9th of Hen. 3d, (1225) Alexander K. of Scotland for the Sum of 500 Merks obtained the Wardship of the young Earl Roger, to provide a Husband for his Sister Isabel. (y) Dugdale says, Roger had formerly married her (scil. Anno 9. Hen. 3d) but passing by the Nonsense of formerly at the same time, had Roger married her formerly, the Scottish King would have saved the Price of his Wardship, as he ought indeed to have done.

William Lord Mareschal left 5 Sons, and as many Daughters. The Sons all died childless, Anselme, the youngest drawing his last Breath 22 Dec. 1245, (z) upon whose Death the Estate was parted among the Sisters but the Office of Mareschal fell to the Countess of Norfolk by Eldership. Dugdale says she receiv'd Livery of it by the King in the 30th Year of his Reign, (a) but without any visible Reason. He afterwards lays by the Staff two Years longer to the 32d

Year of that Reign (1248) (when if you believe him) the King solemnly put the Marshal's Rod into her Hands, which she thereupon delivered to Earl Roger her Son and Heir; which Maud (if he may be credited) afterwards married John de Warren, Earl of Surrey, and departed this Life in the same Year 1248.

But all this is only another Fardle of Blunders. The Writ to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer for the Appointments of Maud as Marshall, and for the Admittance of her Deputy, was in the 30th of K. Hen. 3d, after which she kept fast Hold of the Staff; nor has the Baronagian been a little injurious to the old Lady, in keeping her so long from a Second Choice, and then mismatching her at last.

For John de Warren, if not her own Son, was at least the Son of her second Husband, and married the Year before to another Woman, Alice of Angoulesme. His Father William de Plantagenet, Earl Warren and Surrey, was her second Husband, who married her a green Widow, soon after the Death of Hugh Earl of Norfolk, and dying at London in May 1240, (b) was quiet in his Grave at Lewis in Sussex, about five Years before the Marshal's Rod fell into her Hands.

These Facts will be more apparent by a Grant of hers to a Nunnery at Thetford, which I shall give you as I find it.

Omnibus S. Matris Ecclesie filiis, ad quos præsens scriptum pervenerit, Matill. Marescalla Angliae, Comitissa Norfolciæ & Warennae, salutem in Domino. Noverit universitas vestra me in viduitate mea & plena potestate, Divinæ caritatis intuitu, pro salute animæ meæ, antecessorum & successorum meorum Dedisse, concessisse, & hac præsenti carta mea confirmasse Deo & B. Georgii de Thefford, & Sanctimonialibus ibidem Deo servientibus, tres marcatas redditus argenti annuatim in molendino meo juxta Curiam meam in villa de Cestreford, in puram & perpetuam elemosinam ad indumenta prædictarum Monialium sustinenda, scilicet, medietatem ad indumenta lanea, & aliam medietatem ad indumenta linea earundem—&c.— His Testibus Domino Rogero Bygot Comite Norfolciæ, Dominis Radulfo de Bygot, Willielmo de Hengham, Osberto de Cayly, & multis aliis. (c)

The Deed is without Date, but it must be within the two last Years of her life. It appears she was then not only Widow of Earl Warren, but Marescall of England, and the Earl her Son did not pretend to that Office.

After her Death, 1248, he succeeded to the Office of Marescall, and the laborious Compiler of the Baronage has found another Writ to the Exchequer in his Favour; but it unfortunately happens to be entered upon the close Roll of the 54th of Henry 3d, when he was dead, and succeeded in Title, Office, and Estate, by his Nephew Roger, who would be apt to lay Claim to this Writ. (d)

And here, by the way, I would recommend to the Editor of the next Impression of M. Paris, a short Animadversion upon his Author, where he says. Hoc eodem Anno (1246) multiplicatis intercessionibus, concessa est Marescalcia cum officio & honore Comiti Rogerio Bigod ratione Comitissae filiae Comitis Magni Willielmi Marescalli primogenitae uxoris suæ; not one word of which Paragraph appears to be true. (e)

But to return from these Rambles to my Attendance on the Daughters of K. William of Scotland, I think it is right, that the Lady who was Mistress of K. Henry's Affections was afterwards married to Gilbert Mareschal Earl of Pembroke; but that was not Isabel who was affianced to the Earl of Norfolk, before the King compleated 16 Years, and when she had been two Years absent in Scot-land.

Whereas his Inclination to a Lady of that Family did not discover it self till the Year 1231, (f) when he was at full Age, and the Earl of Norfolk, and his Countess Isabel, then and many Years after both living, for not having used her well, he was reconciled to her, in the Year 1253, which was 22 Years after the King's amorous Fit. (g)

Mr. Mills is pleased to make this Isabel survive her Husband, the Earl of Norfolk, and afterwards marry Eustace de Vescy. (h) I think she died before her Husband, but if not, she could not after his Death marry Eustace de Vescy, who was kill'd above 50 Years before in a Rebellion against K. John, after he had been Restored to his Estate which had been forfeited for his former Rebellious Practices. (i)

On the other hand, Vincent (k) gives her for a second Husband, Robert Ros, of Hamlake. But Robert Ros, who married her elder Sister, died 11th Hen. 3d, above 40 Years before the Earl of Norfolk, and Robert his Grandson married

It is not worth while to mention a Mistake of Sir Peter Leicester, (m) mis-grounded on another Mistake of Knighton, concerning a Marriage of one of the Daughters contracted in the English Court to an Earl of Flanders; but hereby you may see how easy it is to lose our way in these dark intricate Mazes of Antiquity; therefore leaving these and other Wanderings from the Truth, I find there was yet another Sister, who was probably unborn when the other two were delivered to K. John, and was unmarried in the Year 1231, (n) M. Paris calls her Margaret, and others Marjory. (o) She was a Celebrated Beauty, puella elegantissima, as Matthew expresses it: So that she might be the Object of a King's Desires, but not being (as it seems) destined for a Throne, she was about 4 Years afterwards, Anno 1235, married with great Solemnity at Berwick, to Gilbert Lord Marescall, in the Presence of her Brother the K. of Scotland, and many of the Nobility of both Kingdoms. (p) But I doubt this was not with the Consent of K. Henry, who had received many

many ungrateful Provocations from Gilbert in return to Heaps of Favours. Dugdale gives a great Account of the Lady's Fortune and Dowry, and says, that the Earl afterwards married Maud de Lanvalley, (q) without the King's Licence, for which Transgression his Land was seized.

Who this Maud de Lanvalley was, is to me a Secret. The same Author terminates that Family in Hawise de Lanvalley, (r) of whom Hubert de Burgo obtained the Wardship, and married her to his Son John. But if there was such a Person as Maud de Lanvalley, she could not be second Wife to Gilbert Mareschall, he being kill'd by his Horse at a Tournament at Ware held against the King's Command in the Year 1241, and his Widow Margaret remaining in that State about three Years, died on St. Hugh's Day 1244, and was buried in the Church of the Friars Preachers. (s)

I have now found Six Daughters of K. William, Three by Q. Ermingard, and Three before that Marriage: But besides these I find mention of some other Children of his. I must confess I take them to be of the doubtful Gender. However, they shall not pass without due Regard.

The accurate Corrector of old Brook has from the Claim-Roll, on the Competition for the Crown of Scotland, dis-cover'd a Second Son, named Henry, (t) slain by his Uncle K. Malcolm, leaving Issue, Patrick Galightley, one of the Twelve Competitors, which, if true, would indeed be very wonderful; for Malcolm the Maiden, elder Brother of K. William, died in the 26th Year of his Age, about 34 Years before the Birth of Prince Alexander, Elder Brother to this suppos'd Henry.

That K. William had a younger Son, is not denied; but his Name is said to have been John, who was drowned in his Infancy, with his Nurse and some other Persons, by a sudden Inundation of the River Tay, which almost destroy'd an old Town called Bertha, and occasioned
K. William to build near it the City of Perth, now called St. Johnstown, (u) perhaps in Memory of the poor Innocent.
But this Accident was after the Peace made with K. John, and between 40 and 50 Years after the Death of K. Malcolm.

(t) Vincent, 256. (u) Buchanan. Mackenzie's Scottish Writers, f. 2. 79.

Therefore leaving the murdered Son Henry in his original State of Non-Entity, let us see what Vincent says of the Daughters, of which he names Five, as all proceeding from Q. Ermengard. (x) He says Aufrica, the youngest, was married to William Say of Ulster, of whom descended Roger Mandeville, another of the Competitors.

By these Enquiries after the Children of the Scottish King William, I am led into a kind of Anticipation of what I intended to say upon the Subject of the great Competition about the Succession to that Crown, two of the Competitors being here named.

The publick has been obliged with two Copies of Records of that great Cause, one by William Prynne, from that which is called the Claim-Roll in the Tower--the other published from a Record in the Exchequer, in the Chamberlain's Office there ----by Mr. Rymer, among his valuable Collections. They are both in the Name of one Notary-Publick John de Cadomo, but are so different both in Matter and Form, that they can hardly be imagined to come from one Hand. However, waving Surmises, I cannot but wonder, that Vincent, who seems to follow the Record in the Tower, should make Patrick de Galighley the Issue of a Son of King William, when Patrick (if Prynne has copied it fairly) sets forth, that King Henry had two Sons, William and Henry de Galightley, which Henry begot Patrick in lawful Wedlock: Whereas Henry the Father of William never was King, and died 140 Years before the Competition.

(x) Vincent 256.

But Rymer's Copy agrees with Vincent, that King William had two Sons, Alexander and Henry de Galightley, Father of Patrick: So that he must be Brother to K. Alexander 2d.

Roger Mundeville or Mandeville, the other Competitor, above-named, tells a Story, that King William left a Son Henry, and two Daughters to his Brother Malcolm. That Malcolm murdered the Son, that one of the Daughters who shall be nameless, died, and Aufrica the younger marrying William Say of Ulster, had a Son William who had a Daughter Aufrica married to Robert Wardon, or Vandon, from whence proceeded a Daughter Agatha (who whether ever married or not) honest Roger it seems was her Son and Heir, and the 6th in Descent from K. William, whose Marriage was about 150 Years before the Petition. So that this was a nimble Race in the Business of Propagation. But enough of this before, and to speak my own Opinion freely, I cannot believe that either Aufrica or her Brother Henry, were begotten by King William, but kindly father'd upon him by some honest Agent of King Ed. i. and had never been heard of, had they not been hatch'd by the prolific Warmth of that Competition, by which the Scottish Writers seem justified, who say, that a great Number of these remote groundless Pretensions were spirited up by Edward, merely to draw the Matter into his own Hands.

Our Northern King at Arms has, like Jupiter, hatched out of his own Brain yet another Daughter of K. William of Scotland, and has given her Name, a Husband, and a Son. He says her Name was Agnes, (y) that she was married to William de Vescy, Father of Eustace, and had a Son named William: But as I dare believe that either Agnes or her Son were never seen in this World, nor will appear at the Resurrection, I cannot add her to the Number of these Northern Aurora's, of which, besides the Countess of Dunbar in Scotland and Aufrica (if there was such a Person) in Ireland, we have found Five shining in that Age, in our English Horizon, tho' not all in full Lustre at one time; and the Five Ladies married into so many of our noble Families; yet I much doubt whether a Drop of the Blood of any of them can be traced down to this time. However, I hope I have done more Justice to their Memories, than has been paid them by any one Person.

But if our Author has given a Daughter extraordinary to K. William of Scotland, he has robb'd another Great Person (to whom he was indebted in much higher Obligations) of a very extraordinary Daughter. It is no wonder he should blunder in these dark Ages, when he is guilty of notorious Stumbling in the Sunshine of his own Times, and in the most conspicuous Lustre of the Royal Family. This Third Volume of the Baronage was printed in the Year 1676; in which, naming the Children of his Royal Highness James D. of York by his first Duchess, the Lady Catherine Hyde, he mentions three Daughters, Lady Mary, Lady Henrietta, then living, and Lady Catherine, who died in her Infancy. Will not Posterity stand amazed that he should take no more Notice of Lady Anne, the Second Daughter, who was then about 12 Years of Age, and afterwards was our excellent Q. Anne (whose Name will be ever glorious) than if no such Person had ever been born, and names Henrietta as living, who died within her First Year at St. James's the 15th of November 1669 ? About 7 Years before that Publication, had he resided in Lapland, we might have thought him misinformed, or banter'd; but did a Person of his consummate Negligence, in Matters so publick and so obvious to his own Senses, deserve an Employment like this in any better Country ?

From Hence I was making haste to attend my worthy Friend the Baronagian to take a View of the Grand Competition for the Crown of Scotland, and of the House of Bruis of Anandale, from whence issued one of the Competitors at that time, whose Grandson mounted the Throne of that Kingdom ; on both which Subjects this Author hath remarkably exerted his usual Accuracy : But remembering that I am engaged in a Debt of Promise to a Noble Family of the Name of Beaumont, I shall endeavour first to acquit my self of that, and leave the most Worthy, according to the usual manner of Cavalcades, to bring up the Rear.

Our Author, in his 2d Tome, has some Account of a Family of the Name of Beaumont, (2) touching which he says,

 " Second Son of John de Brenne, the last
 " King of Jerusalem.

But to the Honour of our learned King at Arms, he justly rejects the Opinion of those who would shorten the Date of the Original of this Family in England, and brings them in with Isabel the Wife of K. Ed. 2d, whom he married in the first Year of his Reign. Ralph Brooks, without pretending to name their Parents, has given his Suffrage this way, and has passed uncorrected by his Antagonist, which is somewhat strange. (a) But Dugdale, with more Probability at least, supposes, that their first Access hither might be by means of Q. Elianor that King's Mother.

Our Author and others have built upon the Foundation of Glozer's Collections, who was Somerset Herald, created 14 Eliz. Howsoever he came by this blind Story, it has caused a great Division among the Antiquaries, which leaves a Reflection upon the whole Body. I am concerned for the learned Camden, who seems to set out right. He first derives Henry de Beaumont from the famous Family of the Viscounts de Bellomonte; but soon after, is very certain that the Family came from John de Brenne. (b)

But I cannot think this to be so very certain. For John de Brenne, or, de Brienne, a Town in France, not de Bremen (as Mr. Barns is pleased to fancy, (c) who was deservedly raised by his Gallantry to the uneasy Throne of the Kingdom of Jerusalem, with the more desirable Possession of the fair Inheritrix of that Crown, married that Lady in the Year 1210, (d) and by her had a Daughter named Yolante, who about the Age of 15 Years was married to the Emperor of Germany, Frederick the 2d, by Right of which Alliance, he was crowned King of Jerusalem in the Year 1229, (e) and was indeed the last of the Christian Race who possessed any thing of that Kingdom more than the empty Title.

In the Year 1224, John de Brenne (f) married Berengaria, Daughter of Alphonso the 9th King of Leon and his Wife

Berangere, Sister of Ferdinand, 3d K. of Castile, into which Engagement he plunged in the Evening of his Days, when he had been scorched by 64 Summers, or more, yet had from that Bed a Daughter and three Sons.

In the Year 1237, about 13 Years after that Marriage, he died, leaving his Children all young; the Daughter, named Mary, was contracted in her Infancy, and afterwards married to Baldwin Emperor of Constantinople. The Sons were, 1. John, 2. Alphonso; and 3. Lewis; from whom the Beaumonts are derived, as from the 2d Son of John de Brienne. (g)

This youngest Son could not possibly have been born above 8 or 9 Years before the Death of his Father. They were all educated and preferred by Lewis the 9th of France. The eldest, called John of Acre, was Great Butler of France, and married Mary de Coucy Relict of Alexander the 3d of Scotland; how long after his Death, I know not, but in the Year 1257, John of Acre and his Consort had a Licence to travel thro' England into Scotland. (h)

Alphonso the 2d Son was Earl of Eu, and Great Chamberlain of France, from whom descended a long Race of Nobility.

(g) Hist. de Jean de Brienne, 117. (h) Rymur Tom. I. 627.

And the 3d Son Lewis was dignified with the Viscountcy of Beaumont, which was then with the Duchy of Normandy in the Possession and Power of the Crown of France by Conquest from the English.

The foreign Title of this Viscount would hardly have been admitted in the English Court ; and had he had any Sons, they must have been co-temporary with these Beaumonts, not with sufficient Priority of Years to be allowed as their Father. However, if he had left any Male Issue, I think they would have been worth naming ; whereas I have found only a Daughter married into the Family of the Counts Delavalle and Vitry.

Of our Beaumonts were three, Henry, Lewis and Isabel, she who seems to have been the oldest, was Wife of John de Vesey in the Year 1280, (i) and probably sooner, when Lewis de Brenne might be about 50 Years of Age. Henry de Beaumont served under Ed. I. in Scotland, in the Year 1302, and might possibly have acted in a more private Station several Years sooner ; for his Brother Lewis was Treasurer of the Church of Salisbury, A. D. 1294, (k) and afterwards Bishop of Durham. But these seem to have disclaimed the Blood of John de Brenne ; for Robert de Greystanes, who was Sub-prior of Durham at the time of the Bishop's Promotion to that See, says, he was a Man of Generosity, which he had from the Blood of the Kings of France and Sicily, but does not adorn him with Qualities truly royal; for he says he was prodigal in his Expences, and very greedy of Money, without caring how he came by it, (l) not much unlike to what Salust tells us of Cataline. Nor does the Brother Henry appear with a more amiable Character; for having been much trusted, and more rewarded by K. Ed. 2d, after being pardoned for affronting him in open Council, (m) he made a Shift to get into France, attended the virtuous Q. Isabel to the Court of the Earl of Hainault, from whence he came over with the Earl's Brother John Lord of Beaumont in that Country, to assist that dutiful Consort in the pious Work of dethroning her Husband.

But as to the Descent of this Family from the Kings of France and Sicily, altho' due Respect ought to be paid to the Credit of Robert de Greystanes, who was not only co-temporary, but personally acquainted with Lewis de Beaumont, yet perhaps the Sub-prior might be imposed upon by the Pride and Vanity of the Bishop; for upon Trial we shall find this

(m)

no less difficult than the other, to be reconciled to any Rules or Measures of Chronology.

This Stream is derived from Lewis Son to Charles Earl of Anjou, a younger Son of Lewis the 8th of France, who died A. D. 1226, (n) his 4th Son, Charles Earl of Anjou, being then about 7 Years of Age; and when he was about 25 Years old, A. 1245, he married Beatrix the youngest Daughter of Raymund de Berenger, Earl of Provence, the Temples of whose four Daughters were all circled with Sovereign Crowns, the two eldest being adorned with those of France and England.

For several Years, in that Age, the Popes made a kind of Bubble of the Kingdom of Sicily; they pretended, like their elder Brother the Devil, a Power to dispose of all the Kingdoms of the Earth. This of Sicily was offer'd to Richard Earl of Cornwall, and his Nephew Edmund, 2d Son to K. Hen. 3d, was afterwards invested in it: But the Pretence of maintaining that Title having for about Ten Years been made a perpetual Drein to suck and draw away the solid Treasure of the Nation, that airy Title was renounced with more Prudence than it had been accepted.

(n) P. Daniel.

Soon

Soon after which, in the Year 1265, Pope Clement the 4th undertook to grant the Investiture of the Kingdoms of Sicily and Naples to Charles of Anjou, which he lost by the general Massacre of his Countrymen upon that Island, A. D. 1282, remembred by the Name of the Sicilian Vespers.

He died in the Year 1285, in the 66th Year of his Age, his Son Charles being then a Prisoner to the King of Arragon, from which Confinement he was deliver'd, and was crowned King of Sicily, A. D. 1289. The Beaumonts are derived, by our Genealogists on this Side of the Question, from Lewis Brother of this Charles, and 2d Son of his Father; but were it so, Lewis must begin the pleasing Work of Generation in his Cradle; for if we may believe Anderson's Tables, he died in the Year 1248, about 3 Years after the Marriage of his Parents.

Is it not almost incredible, Sir, that any Persons who pretend to trace the Steps of Genealogy should derive any Family either from Persons who never were existing, or from such as were too nearly coætaneous, to be capable of being their Progenitors; and not only so, but admit a dubious Original from several Heads, who must have been on either Side living, and well known, when their pretended imme-

immediate Children were acting upon the Stage of Life.

To avoid these Absurdities, as I suppose, Sampson Erdwick (o) goes as much too far backwards for this Original, and makes Henry de Beaumont a Son of Lewis the 8th of France, which is two Generations higher, and is as much above the Mark as the others are below it; for if Henry de Beaumont lived to the 14th of Ed. 3. (as is truly observed by Dugdale) which was 1341, he must have been near 120 Years old, which had been somewhat remarkable; and if among the Sons of Lewis the 8th, we could have found one named Henry (which I confess I have not been able to do) we must in that Case have looked further for a Father to his Sister Vesey and the Bishop of Durham.

This does not seem to be a Matter worth much Dispute. However, I cannot desert Mr. Camden's first Thought, in support whereof I have another contemporary Author to produce, which is Froissard the Historian, who was a Native of Hainault, was living at the time of Queen Isabel's Descent upon England, and many Years resided here, was acquainted with the secret Steps of that glorious Revolution, could be no Stranger to Henry de Beaumont, nor can be supposed ignorant of the Issues either of Charles K. of Sicily, or John de Brenne; yet derives Henry from neither of them, but says he was Son to the Viscount of Beaumont in England. (p) I cannot give so perfect an Account of these Viscounts as I could wish, but what I can say I shall venture to offer. Be pleased to know, that our K. Hen. 1. (who was mere natural Flesh and Blood) had Seven Side-wind Sons, and as many Daughters of the same sort.

Constance the 5th of these was married to Rosceline, Viscount of Beaumont in the County of Maine, an Appendant to the Duchy of Normandy, and upon Marriage was endowed by her Father with the Manor of Alrichscott, and Town of Suttonton in Devonshire. Authors give her two Sons, Richard, who succeeded his Father as Viscount, and Ralph, Bishop of Angiers. (q) What other Issue I know not, nor do I know what Circumstances of the Family might bring the Viscountess Constance back into England; but here I believe she was, for Mr. Mad-dox has produced from the Pipe-Rolls (r) several Payments of Money in the 4th Year of K. Hen. 2d (who was her Nephew) by virtue of the King's Writs to the Sheriffs of the County of Devon, whither probably she retired to her Estate: Which Payments were made to a Lady stiled only Vicecomitissa, and another afterwards Vicecomitissa de Bel-lomonte. Nor is it improbable, that Odoard le Viscount, to whom that King gave the Barony of Emildon in Northumberland, (s) might be a younger Son of hers.

In the 20th Year of the same King's Reign (t) Richard Viscount of Beau-mont was one of the Witnesses to the Accord between him and his undutiful Sons, and a few Years after we meet with two Daughters of his in the English Court, Ermingard and Constance; the former of these (as has been already noticed) was married in the 32d Year of K. Hen. 2d, (1186) to William surnamed the Lion, K. of Scotland, and Constance the other Daughter afterwards became the Wife of Roger de Tony; on which Couple King John, among other things, settled the Manor and Town in Devonshire, which had been given to her Grandmother Constance by K. Hen. 1. (u)

To the Viscount Richard succeeded Ralph (as I suppose, who in the 3d Year of K. John, was one of the Sureties for the Fealty of John de Maine to that King, who was (x) endeavouring to strengthen himself by Alliances against Philip the French King, and to that purpose the next Year wrote to this Viscount to persuade him into his Party, promising in case of Misfortune or Forfeiture, to make him, competent Satisfaction to be judged by the E. of Leicester and others, (y) which Earl I must observe had the Surname of Beaumont.

It is well known how the whole Duchy of Normandy was presently lost by the Negligence, Inability, or Diffidence of K. John. In this Revolution the Viscount probably must be a Sufferer, and where could he or his Heirs apply for Refuge or Relief so properly as to the English Court?

Where we find in the next Reign one William de Beaumont, who was Witness to a Grant of K. Hen. 3d to William de Valence about the Year 1248. (z) There was also one Godfrey de Beaumont, who with Cecilia de Ferrars his Wife, levied a Fine of the Manor of Bokborn in Northamptonshire, the 6th of K. Ed. 1. (a) Why might not one of these Beaumonts be Father of Lady Vescy and her Brothers?

But

But whoever was their Father, we have, it seems, found a Mother for them in Scotland, whither it cannot be supposed that either Lewis of Anjou, or Lewis de Brenne ever went to raise their Fortunes. To this Mother Dugdale has given the Name of Agnes (b) (or Anne, as he calls her within four Lines after) she was Baroness of Carall, or as he spells it in another Place, Casall, (c) in the Shire of Fife. This he finds upon two Records of the Homage performed by her Daughter Isabel, then Widow of John de Vescy, to K. Ed. i. for that Barony in the 25th Year of his Reign, after his usurped Superiority over Scotland; which Barony had been released to her by her Mother; or as our accurate Author says from another Quotation of one of the same Records, (d) by Q. Elianor, Mother of K. Ed. i.

Will not his Readers be strangely enlighten'd by these Discoveries? How will they know whether the Name of the Baroness was Agnes or Anne; whether the Barony was Carall or Casall; or whether the Title of Isabel was from her own Mother, or the Mother of K. Edw. i. But this is not the only Instance of our Author's Skill and Care in the Citation of Records.

But

But whether the Mother of Isabel was Agnes or Anne, she seems the more likely Person to have been Lady of the Scotish Barony; for when Q. Ermengarde went into that Kingdom, she was without Question attended or followed by some of her Relations who might be provided for there. Nor is it unlikely, that after the Loss of the Viscounty, some of the Family might make a Trip thither from Normandy or England, and might marry the Heiress or Possessor of that Barony, as will be further apparent by what follows.

The Duchy of Normandy continued with little Interruption under the Domination of the French for about 210 Years, till it was recover'd by the victorious Arms of our Heroick King Henry 5th, who not only subdued Normandy and great Part of Guyenne, but gained such Power and Interest in France, as to marry Catherine Daughter of the French King, Charles the 6th, and be declared by the Three Estates Regent of that Kingdom, and Heir to the Crown.

Mr. Rymier could not forbear observing what a Dust was hereupon raised by the Parsons crowding with their Parishioners at their Heels, to take the Oaths to this new Settlement, against the lawful Succession. All Orders of Clergy and and others flock'd to get their Titles confirmed, and their Benefices and Estates secured and augmented. The Viscount of Beaumont was at that time in the Possession of John the second Duke of Alenson, whose Father had it in Marriage with Mary Daughter of John Duke of Bretagne (e) (so that the Title of Brenne was extinguished.) The Father lost his Life at the Battle of Agincour, so memorably fatal to the French, and glorious to the English; and this John the 2d was taken Prisoner at the Battle of Vernieule in the Year 1424, and was some time after dismissed upon Ransom. It was probably in this time that he obtained from the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, a Confirmation of his Viscounty of Beaumont. But he being afterwards active in the Party of the Dauphin, his English Title became forfeited, and the Viscounty, among many other Territories in those Parts, was granted by K. Hen. 6th to his Uncle the Duke of Bedford, Regent there under him, upon whose Death, in the 14th Year of that Reign, all those and other Estates reverted to the Crown.

In the 18th Year of K. Hen. 6th, he was pleased to raise John de Beaumont, a Descendant of our Henry, into the

(e) Seld. Letter to Aug. Vincent.

English Peerage, by the Title of Viscount of Beaumont, (e) thus naturalizing and ennobling that Title, till which time the Stile of Vicecomes in England was only given to Sheriffs appointed for the Administration of a Share of the Laws and Government in the several Counties, instead of the Earls by whom they were anciently ruled under the Crown, but never signified any Honour or Dignity of Peerage.

Within a Year after this Creation, (f) the same King, under his Great Seal of France, granted to the new Viscount and his Heirs Male, under a small Reservation towards the Repairs of the Castle of Roan, the Viscountcy of Beaumont, with its Lordships, Fees, Rents, Revenues and Possessions from which he and his Predecessors were anciently extracted, and whereof he and they had always born the Arms; which Allegations would hardly have found room in the Patent, without consulting the Heralds, and probably some of both Nations.

So that this is like a ruled Case in Law, and if, the Links of the Chain which led to it are not so well united as might be wish'd, yet considering the Distance of Time, if it cannot be charged with any Absurdities, or contradicted by (e) Seld. Tit. of Honour, 631. (f) Ibid. 442.

Reason or Evidence, why may it not pass Muster?

I hope, my good Friend, you will pardon my detaining you so long on this extinct dubious Family; but hereby will be apparent the Uncertainty of human Knowledge in this as well as other Sciences; and so taking my leave of this Subject, I shall proceed to Matters of greater Importance, and endeavour to give some account of the Solemn Contest about the Succession to the Crown of Scotland, which was perhaps the greatest Cause that ever came before any earthly Judicature. The Matter in Question was the Crown of an ancient and potent Kingdom: The Number of Suitors or Parties were no less than Twelve, one of which was King of Norway, another great Kingdom, and all the others of Quality, who all submitted to the Decision of K. Ed. 1st, as Superior Lord of the Kingdom of Scotland, in whose Presence, with the Advice and Assistance of 80 Commissioners, or Auditors, named by the Competitors, and 24 appointed by the Judge (besides all the Prelacy and Peerage of both Kingdoms, who were willing to attend) that important Dispute was by, and before, that August Assembly debated, considered, and at last decided in the most solemn manner, and

and the Judgment pronounced from the Mouth of the Royal Judge himself.

But the Scots (and I am afraid with too much Reason) say, that all this awful Face of Justice was nothing but a Mask, and all the Form and Solemnity of the Trial only a mere solemn Farce. That Edward knew very well the Poverty, Divisions, and Distractions of that Kingdom, that to curb his Oppofers having in the mean while got Possession of most of their fortified Places, he then, to heighten their Divisions, set up a number of vain empty Claims, without regard to Right, but only to secure his own Game, in gaining his Favourite Point of Superiority over Scotland, that by an indirect Advantage taken of a Trust reposed in him, as a friendly Mediator, he fet up this Pretence of Superiority never allowed before by that Nation, and supported only by ransacking some old Historians, who being all English, were not looked upon as fair Evidence. That by these Methods, and a partial Favour to the Cause of those who would be most obsequiously at his Service, all this pompous Exterior was only making a Jest of those sacred things, Truth and Justice, and imposing as far as he was able, both upon God and Man.

However, by the Importance of the Cause, I have been led to enquire into the Persons and Families of the several Pretenders, and to take a transient View of several Articles in the Baronage, relating to some of them, wherein several Questions occurred to me, with which I shall not here trouble you or my self. But that Branch of the Family of Brus, which entered into the Competition, having produced a Person who may be justly placed in the first Rank of Heroes, whose Valour was the only Support of his Title, and whose Blood has run in the Veins of all those who have been Monarchs of this whole Island, down to the present Age, I cannot be unwilling (however weary of this unpleasant Work) to bestow so mnch Labour as may be necessary to correct the Errors of our Antiquary, relating to that Family in the Lineage and Descent whereof as I happen to differ much from that learned Person, that the Matter may be the more easily judged at one View, I have here exhibited Two different Pedigrees of the Family, one according to Dugdale, and another, which I take to be more authentick; whether so or not, is submitted to those who are more conversant in these Studies.

: nova Progens Calo dimittitur alto.

The Original of this noble Family of Bruce, or Brus, as anciently written, was in this Island, from Robert Brus, a Norman, who attended the Conqueror in his successful Attempt upon England, for a Share of Glory and Plunder.

From this Robert the Norman, our accurate Genealogist, in his confused manner seems to place Robert the King in the fifth Degree, but, rightly placed, I think he stands in the seventh Degree of lineal Descent. Now, from the Conquest in the Year 1066, to the Coronation of K. Robert at Scone in A. 1306, are 240 Years, which allow almost 50 Years each to five Generations, which would fuit well enough with an Antedeluvian Pedigree; but in these later Ages, it hath not been very usual for Men to live 50 or 60 Years, before they beget Sons and Daughters.

The Lot of the first Robert, carved out of the Estates of the conquer'd English, lay in the North of England. (g) The Baronage gives him, in the time of the Conqueror, the Manors of Skelton, Merks, Danby, Carlton, and others in Tyorkshire, Anandale in Scotland, and Hert and Hertness in the Bishoprick of Durham, which Estates he says increased so much, that at the time of the Great

(g) Bar. 447.

Survey, he had in the North-riding of Yorkshire, 51 Lordships, and 43 in the East and West-ridings.

Whether he had Hert or Hertness, before the making up of the Great Survey, I am apt to question: But how this Norman should so soon come by the Lordship of Anandale in Scotland, is to me inconceivable. I cannot find that it submitted to the Sword of the Conqueror; therefore must look further for a Title to that Territory.

As to his Lordships in the several Ridings of Yorkshire, being in all 94, according to Dugdale, I can only observe, that either they were very small, or the Estate wasted almost as fast as it increased. For in the 12th of Henry 2d, (b) the two Branches of the Family were charged with but 20 Knights Fees, and I cannot but wonder, if these Lordships were to be found in the Great Survey, that the Name of Brus should not be met with in either of Dr. Brady's nor in Mr. Duchesne's Abstracts of that Record.

The Baronagian says, this first Robert married Agnes Paynell, who was Granddaughter to his Fellow-soldier, Ralph Paynell; that he built and endowed the Abbey of Gisburne, in the 29th of Hen. 1st. (i) That he obtained the Territory of Estrabhanant and other Lands from David K. of Scotland, who began his Reign A. 1124. That he with his eldest Son, Adam, was at the Battle of North-Allerton against the Scots, which was called the Battle of the Standard, and was fought A. 1138, before which Battle Robert having from his Youth been familiar with the Scottish King, had an Interview with him, to whom he made a very pathetick Speech, persuasive to Peace, which was obstructed by a Nephew of the King. (k) And lastly, that he died the 5th of the Ides of May, 1141, in the 6th of King Stephen (which was 75 Years after the Conquest) and was buried at the Abbey of Gisburne in Yorkshire.

Altho' I cannot say I have met with any thing contrary to these Particulars, yet will it not enter into my Head, that Robert Brus, who came in with the Conqueror, was the Man who married Agnes Paynell, or fought in the Battle of North-Allerton, and died in the 6th of K. Stephen, at which time (if he was but 25 Years of Age at the Conquest) his Years must have compleated a Century. And if his Age was 30 or 40 Years when he came over, (which may be as well supposed) his Thread of Life must have been spun out so much longer in Proportion.

But suppose him of what Age you please, he could not have been familiar with the Scottish King David from his Youth, because that King was not born till 11 or 12 Years after the Conquest, at least; for Edgar Atheling, the Heir to the English Crown, went into Scotland the 2d Year after the Conquest, with his Mother and Sisters, and it was two Years more, before K. Malcolm married the Sister Margaret, by whom, besides two Daughters, he had six Sons, of which David was the youngest; but the Son of the Norman Robert Brus (1) might very probably be intimate with him from his Youth, for after the Death of K. Malcolm Canmor, his Throne was usurped by his Brother, Donald Bane, and that Usurper forced to give way to another, a Bastard Son of Malcolm, called Duncan, who being murder'd by one Macpender, the supplanted Usurper remounted the Throne.

In the time of these Usurpations, the Children of K. Malcolm were shelter'd in England by Edgar Atheling, Brother of Q. Margaret their Mother, and the People of Scotland being impatient under the Yoke of the Usurper, sent an Inv-tation to Edgar the 4th born, but eldest surviving Son of Malcolm, to accept of the Government. Edgar hereupon obtained Assistance from K. William Rufus, by which Assistance, supported by his loyal Subjects of Scotland, he successfully recover'd his Right.

One of the Name of Brus attended him in this Expedition, and most probably a Son of the Norman; for Edgar begun his Reign in the Year 1098, which was 32 Years after the Conquest. He generously rewarded the Services of his English Friends, among whom, as Cambden says, (m) who is always of superior Credit to the Baronagian, and particularly, in this Case, Brus had a Grant of the Lordship of Anandale, of which, according to Dugdale, the Norman Robert was possessed before the making up of the Books of Domesday.

This Acquaintance and his Merits might be leading to further Favours from the Brothers of Edgar, who was succeeded by his Brother Alexander, after whose Decease David, the 6th Son of Malcolm, ascended the Throne, in the Year 1134, which was 68 Years after the Conquest, who might, as a further Mark of Friendship, bestow upon Brus the Territory of Estrahanant, and other

Lands

Lands in Scotland; and not only Friendship, and Gratitude, but Self-interest would make Brus desirous of preserving Peace between England and Scotland; for by a War (all his Estates lying upon the Borders) whoever might be Gainer, he was likely to be a Sufferer. Ailredus says of Robert the Speechmaker, that he was Grandævus, & Vir veteranae Militiae, (n) which the Son of the Norman might well be, if 60 or 70 Years may ripen a Man into those Titles. But the Norman himself (who must, if living, have been then near 100 Years of Age) could not have adhered to K. David from his Youth, nor well be supposed either to obtain the Grant from him, or to have acted in the Battle of North-Allerton.

I shall therefore beg the Liberty (leaving every Man to his Opinion) to think that the first Robert died without publick Notice of the particular Circumstances of his Life or Death, and that all or most of the Actions and Charities attributed to Robert Brus, may belong to the Son of the Norman, which Son I take to be Father of Adam Brus of Skelton, and Robert Brus of Anandale, by his Wife Agnes Paynell, Daughter of Foulk Paynell, and Granddaughter of Raphel Paynell, or Paganell, who came over with the Conqueror, and had a good part of his Estate in Yorkshire, out of which his Son Foulk gave the Manor of Carlton with his Daughter in Marriage (o) which probably was the same Carlton, which was by Dugdale generously given to his Father before the making up of Domesday.

This second Robert Brus, in his Lifetime, gave his Lands in Anandale to Robert his younger Son, (p) who being thereby bound in Allegiance to the Scottish King, was in Arms against the English, undoubtedly at the Battle of the Standard (for the two preceding Brothers of King David had no Wars with England) where being taken Prisoner by his Father, he was by him presented to King Stephen, who, in a courtly manner, committed him to the Care of his Nurse (meaning his own Mother) an Expression properly suited to a young Man. (q) Being then at home, and telling his Father they had no Wheat Bread in Anandale, his kind Father, to supply that Want, gave him the Lordship of Hert, and Territory of Hertness, in the Bishoprick of Durham, to hold of him and his Heirs, as of the Lordship of Skelton. This

This Robert Lord of Anandale, whom I call Grand-son to the Norman, died according to our Author, in the 8th or 9th Year of K. Richard 1st, which was about 132 Years after the Conquest; which is a further Confirmation of my Opinion. Besides Anandale, Hert, and Hertness (which he had in the Life-time of his Father) he had also Lands in Yorkshire; for in the Black Book published by Mr. Hearne (s) he is charged with 5, and Adam Brus, Son of his elder Brother Adam, with 15 Knights Fees in that County, both which have escaped the Notice of the Baronage. But he acquaints us, that Robert paid five Merks in the 14th of Hen. 2d, in that County, (t) which must have been for his five Fees there.

This last named Robert is said by some to have been the Man who married Isabel (u) the first-born, or at least first married Daughter of K. William of Scotland; that she was Mother of his Son William, or (as Crawford says) Robert, but neither to this can I assent for several Reasons.

First (as I have observed) that Marriage was celebrated in the Year 1183, and the second Marriage of that Isabel

(s) Lib. Niger. (t) Bar. 449. (u) Crawf. Peerage of Scotland, 70. Abercromby, 560. with with Robert de Ros, was in the Year 1191; (x) whereas our Robert the Father of Robert and William Brus, was living 7 Years after the second Marriage.

Secondly, Our Author says, that, in the 9th Year of King Richard the 1st, A. 1198, soon after his Father's Death, (y) William paid a Fine of 20 Merks to be excused from going into Normandy; but had he been Son of this Isabel, he could not then have had above 13 or 14 Years, and not subject to any such Fine or Service.

The only Wife I have found of Robert Brus (z) the Father of this William, was named Euphemia. She joined with her Husband in a Grant of the Fishery of Torduff to the Monks of Holmcultram, which Grant was confirmed by Robert Brus the younger, and again by William Brus, whom I make no Scruple to call his Sons.

This Robert the younger also joined with his Father in a Grant of the Churches of Moffat and Kilpatrick to the Bishoprick of Glascow, which Grant was made cum consensu Roberti de Brus filii sui.

I therefore think that this Robert the younger was Husband of Isabel,

(x) Cron. de Mailros.

(z) Stevens Mon. f. 8. App. 286.

(y) Bar. 449.

was elder Brother of William, and died without Issue. And this I think, not only because William inherited the Estate of his Father, (however omitted by Crawford;) but if Robert Brus the Competitor for the Crown of Scotland, had been derived from this Isabel, tho' he might probably have adher'd to his Claim under Isabel his Mother (who was Daughter of David Earl of Huntington) as nearer in Descent, and of unquestionable Legitimacy, yet it had been mere Effrontery in Ros to set up a Title under the other Isabel, in which he knew Brus must have stood before him. (a)

How long William de Brus lived, or whom he married, remain to me in the List of Desiderata; but if our Author Dugdale is right in his Vouchers, it is plain that Robert his Son was possessed of the Estate in the last Year of K. John, which was A. D. 1216. (b)

Which Robert, whom our Author calls Robert the 2d of Anandale, (b) married Isabel, second Daughter of David Earl of Huntington, and one of the Sisters and Co-heirs of John surnamed the Scot, Earl of Huntington, and the last Earl of Chester. She was Cousin-German of the other Isabel, supposed to have been married to his Grandfather,

which is some Weakening to that Supposition. By this Wife he had Issue, Robert, who, as Dugdale says, was one of the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas, in the 34th of King Henry the 2d. (c) One Robert Brus is indeed said to have been one of the King's Justices (d) about that time, but there is more Reason to think it was the Father than the Son.

Which Son was Robert the Third of Anandale, altho' he is not so distinguished by our Author Dugdale; he married Isabel the second Daughter of Gilbert de Clare, E. of Gloucester, in the Year 1240, the Bride being then under 13 Years of Age. (e) It is said he had Lis very of the Lands of his Mother's Inheritance in 36th of K. Henry 3d, when probably his Father was newly dead: (f) That after this he might be Governor of Carlisle I cannot deny, tho' it was a dangerous Trust to be lodged with a Subject of Scotland. That he took Part with K. Henry against that insolent Rebel Simon Mountfort and his Adherents, and was taken Prisoner with the King and other Great Men at the Battle of Lewes, is not to be questioned; and for the smaller Incidents of his Life taken from Records, I can form no Judgment of them for Want of Opportunities to inspect them.

(c) Bar. 450. (d) M. Paris, 780. (e) Vincent,

I shall therefore hasten to what relates to the Pretensions on the Crown of Scotland, where King Alexander the 3d, who was Grandson of William the Lion, (so often here named) having buried his first Wife, Sister to our K. Edward 1. and made a second Choice; and having lost two Sons and a Daughter, Margaret, married to Eric K. of Norway, had the Misfortune to break his Neck from an unruly Horse, leaving only one Descendant, an Infant Granddaughter, named Margaret, after her Mother the deceased Queen of Norway.

Notwithstanding the remarkable Consequences which followed upon his Death, Historians are very ill agreed about the Date of that Accident; but I chuse to follow the Authority of Mr. Simpson, who is generally very exact. He fixes it on the 19th of March, 1285-6, in the 46th Year of his Age, and 37th of his Reign; after which the Nobles of Scotland swore Allegiance to his Grand-daughter the Maiden of Norway (as she was called) for whom a Marriage was proposed with Prince Edward, Son to K. Ed. 1. In order to which, Embassadors being sent from Scotland, found to their great Sorrow and Disappointment, pointment, that she died about the time of their landing in Norway.

Upon her Death arose the great Competition for the Succession to the Crown of Scotland, which was unavoidably referred to K. Edward, who in the unsettled Condition of that Kingdom, on the sudden Death of their late King, taking advantage of the Proposal of Marriage, made it his first Busines to get Possession of most of their Places of Strength: So that they were not in a Posture to dispute his assumed Title of Superior Lord of Scotland. Twelve Claims were set up under several Titles to the Crown, to raise a Dust, as it seems; for Ten of them vanish'd soon after their first Appearance, like Spirits at the Command of the Power by which they were raised. For altho' the Claimants were left at Liberty to prosecute their Petitions, they knew it would be to no Purpose.

The great Dispute lay between Robert Brus and John Baliol, Lord of Galloway in Scotland, which was his Mother's Inheritance, and of Bernard Castle in the Bishoprick of Durham. Our Author says, " That Brus alledged, that he was the immediate Son of Isabel, the second Daughter of David Earl of Huntington, and that John Baliol

" was but the Son of Devorgill, Daughter
" of Margaret the eldest Daughter " [who was the Wife of Alan, Lord of " Galloway; so that he stood one Degree nearer in Consanguinity [or De-scant] than Baliol. (g)

Thus far our Author was right. The whole Case was drawn into one Point,

(b) An remotior in uno gradu in Succesfione exiens de primogenita debeat setundum leges utriusque Regni excludere proximiorem in gradu exentem de secundo genita? vel proximior in gradu exiens de secundo genita debeat excludere remotiorem in uno gradu exentem de primogenita?

This Question, shaped in Favour of Baliol's Pretension, being made the Hinge of the Cause, and publickly proposed to the Nobility and Prelacy of both Kingdoms, to all the Council and Auditors, it was unanimously answered, that in all hereditary Successions, the more remote in one Degree lineally descending from the First-born, according to the Laws and Customs of both Kingdoms, was to be preferred before the nearer in Degree issuing from the Second-born.

Hereupon Brus joined with Hastings, another of the Competitors, (of whose Claim our Author has taken no notice in his Article of that Family) his Title being derived from Ada the youngest Daughter of Earl David. He claimed only a third Part of the Kingdom as a partable Inheritance, with which Brus falling in upon the Verdict against him, each of them put in his Plea or Petition for a Third Part, upon that Allegation; and according to Mr. Rymer, Baliol petitioned in the same manner: But this being over-ruled, the King proceeded afterwards, 17 November to give Judgment, That John Baliol should recover, and have Seisin of the Kingdom of Scotland.

(g) Bar. 450. (b) Pynne Edw. I. 524.

You have here a short Report of the Case. But our learned Puzzle-eause, after the Allegation of Brus, that he stood one Degree nearer than Baliol, goes on thus. (i) "Whereunto Baliol replying, " that by reason his Mother, who was " next Heir could not reign, the Right " was adjudged to him by the Forty " chosen Peers, viz. 20 of Scotland, and " as many of England." Some Lines after which, he proceeds as follows. " It is " said by others, that the Claim of our " Robert was grounded upon certain " Expressions made by Alexander King of " Scotland, Son of William before-mentioned, who despairing of Issue of his

(i) Bar. ubi supra.

" own Body did, in the Presence of divers Persons, declare him to be his Heir.

How convincing soever the Reply which the Baronagian has learnedly framed for John de Baliol might appear, either to him or his Forty Peers of his own Creation, I know not who will now be able to discover in it any Cogency of Reasoning : For the Question, Whether Baliol's Mother was next Heir, or not, is not very clearly decided by a bare Allegation ; and by admitting her Incapacity of Reigning, he has in a manner given up the Cause. For if she was incapable of Reigning, what Title could he derive from her ? Nor has he done more Justice to Brus, in leaving his Title dubious, whether it was in Right of his Mother, or upon some Expressions made by King Alexander, for which latter he gravely cites the Claim-Roll in the Tower, and this (which is not there to be found) is all he pretends to take from that noble Monument of Antiquity, which contains an Entry of all the Proceedings on that great Transaction. And this, Sir, I hope, amply proves how well our learned Author understood the Nature and Use of Records.

For whereas Baliol desired to be decided according to the Laws of England in other Successions, (k) Brus insisted, that he being the Son of the second Daughter, ought to be preferred to the Daughter of the first-born, according to the Law of Nature, and the Custom of the Kingdom of Scotland, in Descents of the Crown, different from the Law in private Cases, of which Custom he adduced several Precedents; and as a Confirmation of his Title, he alledged, that it was acknowledged by King Alexander the 2d, before the Barons of the Realm; that, in the same manner, King Alexander the 3d acknowledged him to be Heir to the Crown, upon Failure of his own Issue; and that these Parliamentary Settlements, or Recognitions, were made with the Knowledge of Devorgill the Mother of Baliol, and without any Opposition from her.

That the Custom of that Kingdom, in Descents of the Crown, was different from the Law in private Cases, appeared not only, as having always before that time preferred the Succession of Collateral Males before Females in Lineal Descent, but in wisely preventing the Kingdom from being crumbled in Pieces, as a partable Inheritance: And perhaps Bruce's Petition for a Third Part might be rather intended to clear that Point, than with any Thoughts of getting the Third.

By these Arguments of Brus, it may seem, as if the wonderful Unanimity which outwardly appeared in the Answer returned to the Grand Question, did not so much result from any deliberate Consideration of the Case, as from some other Motives. However it was, if Edward's indirect Dealing and Partiality was so displeasing to others, that he was smartly reprehended by his own Son-in-Law, the Earl of Gloucester, the Judgment could not be very pleasing to Brus, who thought himself thereby aggrieved, and shew'd his Resentment so far, that he openly refused to do Homage to the new King.

But before the Judgment, Brus foreseeing the Event, and being then very ancient, and not fit to undergo the Fatigues of prosecuting his Right in another Manner, it appears by an Instrument dated at Berwick the 7th Day of November, being the Morrow after the Feast of St. Leonard, which was the Day after the Verdict, before his Title could be judicially defeated, that, (1) by the Name of Robert de Brus, Lord of Anan-

(1) Vincent, 255.

date, he granted and " released to his
 " dear Son Robert Earl of Carrick, and " his Heirs, all the Right and Claim " which he had, or could have, to ob" tain the Kingdom of Scotland; with " full Power to demand the same, and " prosecute his Right in such Manner
 " as he should think convenient." Which Instrument was witnessed, and therefore not disapproved by the Earl of Gloucester.
 At which time, the Earl of Carrick released to his Son, Grandson to the Competitor, the County of Carrig, and all the Estate which had been his Mother's, (m) which Release was pleaded the next Year in the Court of John de Balliol, when the Father was upon his Travels.

But let us hear the Baronagian, as to the Behaviour of Brus the Competitor, after his Refusal of Homage to the new made King. (n) He says, that " there" upon he gave up all his Lands in Anan- dale to Robert his eldest Son, begot-
 " ten on the Sister of Gilbert de Clare
 " Earl of Gloucester, who also refusing " to do the like Homage, he said to
 " Robert his second Son, begotten on
 " the Daughter of the Earl of Carrick,
 " Take thou my Land in Scotland:

(m) Rymur 1. 614. (n) Bar. 450.

"whereof accepting, he did his Homage
"accordingly.

What a Bundle of Mistakes is here fagotted together, without any Mixture of Truth? The Wife of Brus the Competitor was not Sister to Gilbert, but Richard Earl of Gloucester, and Aunt to Gilbert, who married the Daughter of King Edward; nor had the Competitor Brus any Son by the Daughter of the Earl of Carrick, who never was married to him, but to his Son; nor was any younger Son of his ever possessed of his Lands in Anandale, the old Gentleman himself retiring to that Estate after the Contest; and notwithstanding his Non-performance of Homage or Allegiance to the new Idol of a King, ended his Days in Peace at Lochmaban in his Lordship of Anandale, in the Year 1295, and slept with his Father and others of his Ancestors in the Abbey of Gisburn. (o)

I was under some Difficulties in finding out the Countess of Carrick, who was the Wife of his Son, some calling her the Daughter, and others the Widow of the Earl of Carrick; but as far as I can discover, she was both, being sole Daughter and Heiress of Niel Earl of Carrick, and being first married to Adam

(o) Knighton, 2057.

de Kilcontach, who in her Right was stiled Earl of Carrick. (p)

By some Writers she is called Martha, and by others Margaret, which Variation may proceed from some Mistakes in the Abbreviations of the old Vouchers or Copies. Her first Husband, Adam, with Robert Brus, Son of the Competitor, and other Noblemen, accompanied Prince Edward, afterwards K. Ed. I. in his Expedition to the Holy Land in the Year 1270, from whence Adam never returned, but died at Acon without Issue.

His Comrade, Robert Brus, being born under more auspicious Stars, returned safe home, and soon after marrying the Widow of his Friend, was in her right stiled Earl of Carrick, at and before the time of the Competition.

That the eldest Son of Brus the Competitor was Earl of Carrick, plainly appears by the Deed of Grant and Release lately cited, which no Man can ever think was made to a younger Son. We find also in the Proceeds of the Great Cause, the Competitor by the Name of Robert Lord of Anandale, and another Robert Brus Earl of Carrick, is frequently mention'd; but there is no Appearance of any elder Brother. We are also oblized to the Baronage (q) for an Agreement dated at Turnbury in Carrick [a Seat of the Earl] on the Eve of Saint Matthew 1286, between James Stewart of Scotland and his Brother and Uncle, Robert Brus Lord of Anandale, (afterwards Competitor) and his two Sons, Robert Earl of Carrick, and Bernard Brus, Patrick Earl of Dunbar and his three Sons, Eneagusius, Fitz-Donal, and his Son) whose Estates all lay in the South and South-west Parts of Scotland) on the one Part, and Richard Earl of Ulster, and Thomas de Clare (both of the North of Ireland) for a mutual Assistance against all Persons, saving their respective Allegiance to the Crowns of England and Scotland. Which Treaty was made within Six Months after the Death of K. Alexander the Third, to guard against any ensuing Disturbances, and tho' it was never put in Execution, it makes one more Evidence to prove who had then the Title of Earl of Carrick, and consequently who was Husband to the Countess in whose Right that Title was acquired.

If there had been an elder Son of Brus the Competitor, he would certainly have been a Party to this Agreement, in which he would have had a greater

Concern than the younger Son Bernard, of whom our Author takes no further Notice, after having thus introduced him; but it ought to be observed, that from him are derived the Family of our famous Antiquary, Sir Robert Cotton in Huntingdonshire, and the Harringtons in Rutlandshire. (r)

I have already mentioned, that Brus the Competitor died in the Year 1295, having, a few Months before his Death, by his Charter dated at Lochmaben, on the Feast of St. Lucia (13 Dec.) 1294, confirmed a Grant of Fisheries and Salt-pits to the Abbey of Holmcultram; to which Charter (s) Robert de Brus, Earl of Carrick (who must then be the Grandson) with his Friend Roger de Kirkpatrick, and others, were Witnesses. The Day of the Competitor's Death, according to Knighton, was in Qua Domini, (t) which, by the Dugdalian Interpretation, is called Good Friday, (u) but by better Expositors is rendered in English, Maunday Thursday. On which of these Days the Man died, is of no great Importance; but surely the Baronagian, in not distinguishing the Day on which our Lord might be supposed to have received his Viaticum, or last Preparatory,

paratory Supper, from that of his great Catastrophe, has made an Addition to the many Instances of his misusing his Authors, and of a signal Defect of Care or Knowledge.

But if he slumber'd a little over this Matter, he was surely fast asleep in that which follows, where speaking of this Competitor, he says, (x) "In this Business of the Competition, it is also said, that he bore himself very bold to his Kinsmen in that Realm, and sent specially for John Comyn, another of the Competitors, to meet with him at the Grey Fryers in Dumfries, where telling him his Mind, he bid him take his Inheritance of Carrick [which never was his] and assist him to be King of Scotland; or let me have thine (quoth he) and I will help thee to be King: And that Comyn not consenting thereto, was slain, as also his Uncle, who then struck this Robert such a Blow, that, had he not been well harnassed, he had been likewise slain.

Could any Man with his Eyes open dream in this manner? Is there one who looks into the History of those Times, but knows, that John Comyn of Badenach was killed at Dumfries in the Beginning of the Year 1306; and our Author has told us, (and very truly as it happens) that this Competitor died in the Year 1295. Now, dear Sir, is it not very miraculous, that his Disappointment should make him as blood-thirsty as a Vampire, and that after about ten Years he should steal out of his Grave, with a malicious Design to commit Murder?

But, upon the Credit of the Baronage, it might be questioned whether he lay so long at Rest in his cold Lodging; for the second-sighted Author of that Work has discover'd something of his Name, assuming the Title of King of Scotland, in the 24th of Edw. 1. (y) the next Year after his Decease, and has summon'd one Eustace Hacche to march into that Country against him. Whether Eustace blew him into the Red Sea, or drubb'd him back into his Burrow; how he appear'd, or how he vanish'd, I give my self no Trouble of thinking; but it could be only a Phantom of a King; for we shall soon find, that not only his Son, but his Grandson, who about ten Years afterwards did assume the Title of King of Scotland to some Purpose, were at this time engaged in the Service of the English King, and admitted to a share of his Favour and Confidence. Baliol was indeed deposed in this Campaign, and perhaps some Persons, not forward to believe Stories of Goblins and Spectres, may be apt to throw this upon the monstrous Heap of the Author's Blunders and Mistakes.

The same accurate Writer further says, that Brus the Competitor left a Wife, Christian, surviving him. (z) But who this Wife, Christian, was, I confess I am unable to resolve, her Father, Mother and Descent, being as much, concealed from me (and I believe from him also, as those of Melchisedeck). 'Tis said indeed, that he had a Daughter Christian, who was married to Patrick Earl of Dunbar and March, Father, as Crawford says to another of the same Name, who was also a Competitor under a Title from his Grand-mother, Ada, second Daughter of K. William, on which Title (tho' a crack'd one) he insisted to the time of his Death, which was about a Year before the Competitor Brus went the same way.

To come now to his Son Robert the 4th Lord of Anandale, by our Author called the Third, he does not seem to have exerted his Claim to the Crown of Scotland, either by his Grant or Descent from his Father; there were several previous Steps to be taken. He first got Liverry of his Lands in England, (a) and in July 1293, (b) next after the Judgment, he obtained a Licence from K. Ed. to travel into Norway, to continue to Michel-mas following, and for a Year afterwards, which perhaps might be to keep out of the way of Suspicion.

In the 25th of Ed. I. after the Death of his Father, a Writ was issued acknowledging his constant Fidelity, and commanding Livery of his Lands in Scotland. (c)

In this Writ he was called Robert de Brus, Senior (in regard of his younger Brother, the Earl of Carrick, says Dug-dale). (d) He is so fond of this imaginary Cadet Earl, that he cannot part with him: But if such an one had been in the Land of the Living, and possessed of those Lands by Grant from his Father, and had done his Service and Allegiance, the elder Brother would not easily have recover'd his Inheritance.

That he was then distinguished by the Addition of Senior, appears not only by this Writ, but upon the Record of Allegiance to King Edw. the 1st, in the 24th Year of his Reign. We find, among the great Numbers of Scotsmen

who then submitted, the Names of Robert de Brus, Senior, and Robert de Brus, Junior, Earl of Carrick, (e) who was the Son, and not the Brother of Robert the elder, and then by Release from his Father, and Inheritance from his Mother, had a good Title to that Earldom, which during his Minority had been held by his Father, as the Earldom of Gloucester was by Mountbermer in the Minority of Gilbert de Clare, (f) of which Cases several others might be produced.

This Robert Brus the elder carried so fair to King Edward, that soon after his Father's Death he was entrusted with the Government of Carlisle, in which Trust it appears above, that he had behaved to Satisfaction, the Kingdom of Scotland at that time being so totally subdued, and his Rival Baliol ruling there as a kind of Vice-roy, that it was not only vain, but dangerous, to act in any other manner. He was summoned to the English Parliaments, and attended King Edward in his Expedition into Scotland, in the Year 1296, to chastise Baliol, who being tired out by Edward's repeated Insults, both upon him and his Country, had entered into a

(e) Prynne Edw. i. 683.(f) Bar. 217.

League with France against the King of England, who then trusted Bruce so far, that on the 14th of May, a Writ was directed to him, to receive into the King's Peace, such of the English and Scottish Inhabitants of Annandale, as were willing to submit; and a like Writ to his Son for the County of Carrig. (g) but the Scottish Writers tells us, (h) that Brus was wheedled by the Promises of Edward, that he would dethrone Baliol, and make him K. of Scotland. But after the Battle of Dunbar, and other Successes much owing to Brus and his Friends, when Baliol was Prisoner, and that Kingdom reduced, Bruce reminding K. Edward of his Promise, could obtain nothing but a sneering Answer, Do you think we have nothing to do but to conquer Kingdoms for you? (i)

This might cause a Heart-burning, so that from this time forwards there is no Appearance of any cordial Affection between K. Edward and him. We do not find that he was summoned to Parliament after this Year. Our Author indeed says that he was in the Expeditions into Scotland, in the 26th, 27th, and 31st Years of K. Ed. i. all which I am apt to question? And the rather, for that he came to a new Submission the 9th of July in the next Year, 25 Ed. I. with Recognition of three of his Friends, that for his good Behaviour, he should deliver his Daughter Margery as a Hostage; whereupon in November following he was received again to Peace, * and probably then had the Benefit of his Writ of Livery.

(g) Aber. T. 1. 478. (h) Rym. T. 2. 714. (i) Aber. 493.

He might indeed be afterwards summoned upon his Military Tenures. But if he did his Service in Obedience to the King's Writs, he was but ill rewarded: (k) For before the Batle of Falkirk in the 26th of Edw. I. which was 1298, Robert Clifford marched from Carlisle into Anandale, at the Head of 20,000 Men, and as soon as they had passed the Water of Solwath, which was its Boundary, it was proclaimed at the Head of the Army, That they should do no good to any but themselves.

There was no Fear but the Soldiers would take that ample Licence in the most extended Sense. The Vanguard killed some of the Inhabitants, and shut others into a Marsh, till the Foot came up, who kill'd above 300 of them, and took several Prisoners, and then returning to their Prey, ravaged the open Country, and burnt Ten Villages which the Ancestors of Brus had given to the Abbey of Gisburne, after which they returned to Carlisle loaden with the Spoils of the poor People, and bringing several of them away Prisoners; and afterwards they made another Inroad the same way, in the Beginning of Lent, burnt the Town of Anand, and carried off another Cargo of plunder and Captives. (l)

Where Robert Brus the elder then was, I know not; but he seems to have been about home; for his Son the E. of Carrick being in the English Service, it seems to be he who, after the Battle of Falkirk, upon the Return of the victorious English Army homewards, burnt and deserted his Castle of Are, and had his Castle of Lochmaban seized by the Conquerors. (m)

These were but odd Love-Toys, and therefore I cannot think the Bruces were so obsequious to K. Edward, as they have been generally supposed: But where or howsoever this Robert Bruce spent his later Days, he died in or not long before the 32d Year of Ed. the 1st (1304) and was buried in the Abbey of Holmcultram in Cumberland.

If Dugdale was to be believed, he died Childless, for he says he left Robert de Brus, Earl of Carrick, his Brother and Heir, 23 Years of Age, who had Livery of his Lands, and afterwards was King of Scotland.

But Robert Brus, who died in 1304, left a numerous Issue, Five Sons and Eight or Nine Daughters; his eldest Son was Earl of Carrick, who when King of Scotland, gave that Earldom to his second Brother Edward; the three younger were Niel, Thomas, and Alexander, who was Dean of Glasgow.

But all the four younger Sons were unfortunate, the three youngest falling into the Hands of Ed. i. in the opening Flower of their Youth, were (with his usual Humanity) cropped by the Hands of the Executioner! Niel at Berwick in the Year 1306, Thomas and Alexander at Carlisle, in 1307. The second Son, Ed. Earl of Carrick, after the Battle of Striveling, went into Ireland, in the Year 1315, to give a Diversion to the English, and assist the Natives in shaking off the Yoke, under which perhaps they had but too much Occasion to groan. He was successful in several Actions, and crowned King of Ireland. But in the Year 1318, in a Battle, near Dundalk, was routed and kill'd: After which his Head and mangled Carcase were dispersed and exposed, according to the Mode of those times. (n)

From these melancholly Objects I return to the more fortunate eldest Son, the

(n) Annals of Ireland.

Great Robert Brus, the Fifth of that Name of the Family of Anandale, and Seventh in Descent from Robert the Norman. As Heir to his Mother, he was Earl of Carrick; from his Father he was Lord of Anandale in Scotland, with Hert and Hertness, and other Seignories in England; from his Great Grand-mother had a Title to the Crown of Scotland, which he was resolved to prosecute; towards which his own Years, Bravery and Resolution, with the Courage and Honesty of a small depressed loyal Party, was all he had to depend on, in Opposition not only to a potent, wise, magnanimous King, who had thrice subdued that Realm, and to outward Appearance crushed all his Opposers there, but to the Jealousy and Envy of many of the great Men of his own Nation. But all these Difficulties were but Spurrs and Incentives to a Man who was absolutely fond of Glory, fearless of Danger, and passionately bent upon rescuing the Liberties of his Country. But the steep craggy Mountains in his way were to be ascended with Caution, and where he could not proceed in a direct Course, he was obliged to make such Detours as were necessary to attain his Journey's End.

His Submission to K. Edward in the Year 1296, with his Father and most of the considerable Men of the Scottish Nation, has been mentioned; and the next Year the English Justices summoning the Scottish Non-Furors to take the Oaths, and outlawing or banishing all such as refused them, very narrowly escaped from being surprized by the provok'd Scots, who afterwards committed other Hostilities. Upon which the Earl of Carrick being suspected, he was sent for by the Bishop of Carlisle, and other Officers of K. Ed. to whom he took repeated Oaths. After which, as a further Proof of his Fidelity, he enter'd upon, and wasted the Lands of the loyal Sir William Douglas, who was one of the few inflexible Non-Furors, and carried his Wife and Children into Anandale (perhaps to preserve them out of worse Hands) and it seems to have been so taken, for Sir James Douglas, after the Death of his Father Sir William, who died confined, but not subjected by the English King, was one of the small Party who adhered to Brus upon his Accession to the Scottish Crown, and continued his fidus Achates thro' all the Vicissitudes of his Life.

But in private, the Earl of Carrick, to his Father's Followers and Tenants, excused the Weakness of his Compliance, by the Necessity of his Affairs, assuring them of his immovable Affection, and desiring desiring their Assistance and Advice, but met with small Encouragement at that time. (o)

Fear of the English, more than Want of Affection to him, kept them so close. They found how subject they were to be over-run and plunder'd, which they did not avoid by this Modesty; for in August the same Year, Henry ac Piercy was sent by Earl Warren into Anandale, with upwards of 40,000 Men, where sleeping securely at and about Lochmaben they were alarmed at Midnight with a Cry, that the Scots were upon them. Whereupon firing the Houses where they lay, they run away by the Light, and marching from thence to Are, to offer Peace to the Men of Galloway, removed their Camp upon such another Alarm to the Country near Irwin. But after all, the Scots being too weak to hazard an Engagement, several of them came in and submitted. (p)

Thus far the Earl of Carrick stood fair, and in the next Year 1298, served in the Army against the Scots (notwithstanding the Havock made upon his Father's Estate) and had a Share in the Victory at Falkirk. But his acting there, was more out of some jealous Apprehensions of Wallace, than any Affection to

(o) Knighton, 2514. (p) Ibid. 2516.

Edward. The gallant Wallace, who was a Man of uncommon Strength of Body, and greater Fortitude of Mind, having, upon a great Number of daring Enterprizes in Defence of the expiring Liberties of his Country, attended with amazing Success, been chosen Guardian or Regent of the Kingdom, had render'd himself the Darling of the Populace, and the common Subject of their rude Poetry. Brus was not without some Fears that Wallace might make the Affections of the People a Step to the Throne; he therefore acted with his natural Vigour upon this Occasion. The Scottish Generals, by Differences among themselves, and by the Treachery of John Comyn and others, who being corrupted by Edward, deserted the Field without fighting, had so much weaken'd and dishearten'd the Army, that they were obliged to give way to the superior Force of the Enemy. Whereupon, the Earl of Carrick, with his Followers, wheeled about towards the Rear of Wallace's Troops with Intention to intercept his Retreat; which the other timely preventing, he put himself upon the Pursuit, and coming to the Bank of the River Carron, which Wallace had passed, and put in his Front, making a Stand there to secure the Retreat of his broken Forces, Brus called to him cross the

the River, expostulating with him, " How
 " he could hope to obtain the Crown of " Scotland against a most potent Adver" sary, and an envious Nobility, with" out any Dependence but on the Com" monalty, who would follow or leave
 " him, according to the Success of his " Fortune, by which he was now de" serted." To which the brave Wallace, always uniform and like himself, replied;
 " That he had not acted with any " Thoughts of the Crown, to which he " had no Title, nor could ever deserve " or desire it; that he scorned the " Name of an Usurper: That his Sole " End was to deliver his Country from " Oppression and Slavery; and had the " Nobles but remained unactive, and " only suffered their Tenants to come " into him, he could instead of 10,000,
 " have had ten times that Number of " fighting Men, and would not have " doubted of driving the English out of " Scotland. That this ought to have " been his Part, who had a Title to the " Crown, which if he dared to attempt,
 " he might win with Glory, and wear
 " with Justice. But if he had rather re" main a Slave, he might take his Choice.
 " But for his own Part, tho' his good
 " Design was frustrated by the Jealousy
 " and Envy of the Nobles, he was re-cld
 " solved

" solved to live and dye free, and never
 " submit to any foreign Power, caution-
 " ing him withal, that if ever he went " about the Recovery of his Right, he " should beware of the formidable
 " Power of the Comyns. (q)

These generous Sentiments, uttered with such Noble Air of Sincerity, must sink into the Breast of any Man, much more of one who had so near a Sympathy of Soul; nor was it long before some Effects appeared: For Wallace finding it in vain to contend against a superior Force with his Hands tied by the Envy of the Nobility of his own Country and Party, laid down his Command, which was soon after conferred upon his treacherous Associate John Comyn.

This Comyn was Son to John Comyn Lord of Badenach by his Wife Margery, Sister to John Baliol, Titular King of Scotland. The Father had been one of the Claimants of the Crown, at the time of the Great Competition, upon a remote ill grounded Title from Donald Bane the Usurper, of equal Validity with many others then set up and encouraged, and as easily quash'd. But the Son might perhaps feed himself with Hopes, that upon the Abdication of Baliol, he might have room to set up a new Title from his Mother, as Heiress to her Grandmother Devorgill, passing by the abdicated King and his Son Edward, as if they had never been. Such a Claim indeed could not in any Degree stand in Competition against Brus; but Comyn was a Man of great Interest, and if he could have seated himself upon the Throne, Power has such a strange Effect upon Law, that he would not have been unfurnished with a Title.

However, when Comyn had taken upon him the Office of Regent, or Guardian of that Kingdom, the Earl of Carrick joined with him, and the Bishop of Saint Andrews, Bishop of Glasgow, Sir Simon Fraser, and others, who repined to see their Country subject to a Foreign Yoke, but without any open Assertion of his Title to the Crown, which at that Juncture would only have occasioned new Ruptures to the Prejudice of the common Cause.

About 5 Years they carried on an unequal Contest against the K. of England, by the help of two short Truces and the Intercession of the Pope and the French King: But in February 1304, Comyn, for himself and his Assistants, concluded a Treaty with Edward's Commissioners, submitting upon Safety of Life, Limb, and Estate, subject to Fines and Ransoms, soms, with an Exception of some Persons, of which Number was the inflexible Wallace, whom Edward finding neither to be subdued by his Sword, nor corrupted by his Bribes or Promises, he found one of a different Temper, Sir John Monteith, whom he hired to betray his Friend, and forfeit his own Honour, by letting in a Party of Edward's to surprize him in his Bed, as he lay near Glascow, by which Snare the Lion being taken, he was hastily dispatched, being hurried up to London, and tried at Westminster the 23d of August, (r) within 8 or 9 Days after his Surprizal: And altho' he had never submitted to Edward's pretended Superiority, nor ever paid or owed him any Allegiance, was condemned and executed as a Traitor, with the most horrid Circumstances of Ignominy and Barbarity. Thus fell the brave Wallace a Martyr to his own Honour, and the Liberties of his Country. But there was Glory in the Scandal of his Cross, and by his own Virtues the base Trafficking and unmanly Cruelty of Edward, and the Treachery of the vile Judas Monteith, his Name and Memory will be conveyed with Honour to the latest Records of Time, in spite of all the false idle Calumnies of our Monkish Historians.

But to descend to more common Affairs. About six Months after Comyn's Treaty in September 1305, Commissioners of both Nations were appointed to advise about settling the Government in Scotland. The Earl of Carrick being named for one, and upon the Settlement was intrusted with the Nomination of a Gouvernour of Kildrumyn Castle, for whom he was to be responsible, and about this time he had Livery of his Lands in England. (s)

By this Agreement most of those Scotsmen, who had acted with Comyn, compounded for their Estates, to which Composition some were admitted at 2, others at 3, 4, or 5 Years Purchase, and the Civil Government was put into the Hands of Persons appointed by Edward, who without question thought he had hereby finished his Work in that Kingdom.

Their Laws being changed, the whole Frame of their Government dissolved, their publick Records destroy'd, their Regalia seized and carried away, their Persons and Families insulted and harassed by the English Soldiery, and Civil Officers, the conscientious Non-Furors banish'd or outlawed, and great Numbers detained in several Prisons, where many of them ended their Days, and the active Men laid under these heavy Compositions, what Resistance was to be expected from a depressed Party and People? But all these Severities, Cruelties, and Oppressions, instead of subduing the honest Scots of that Age, aggravated and inflamed them in such a manner, that by their Actings and Sufferings, they afford one of the most shining Instances in History of what Wonders may be done by a poor ruined People, animated with Resentment, endued with Virtue, and armed with Resolution, in Defence of their just Rights and Liberties, against the strongest Force of Usurpation, Tyranny and Oppression.

Their Noble Struggles under the Conduct of their great Leader Sir William Wallace, remain bright in History; but having lost that Heroe, and their next Regent Comyn, having been unable to maintain his Ground, notwithstanding the surprising Success of the Battle of Roslin, their only remaining Hopes were center'd in the Conduct and Government of Brus, whose Title they acknowledged, and whose Bravery they admired; who on the other side was no less ready to vindicate his own Right, and attempt the Relief of his Country. But he knew the Power and Interest of the Lord of Badenach; therefore, in the first Place, he endeavoured to gain him to his Party: To which purpose he enter'd into a written Agreement, whereby Comyn engaged to assist him in the Recovery of his Right to that Crown, which if obtained, Brus was to make over to him and his Heirs all his own private Estate in Scotland, (which was very considerable) and gratify him with other Favours, which would have made him the second Person in the Nation. (t)

But Comyn intended another Use of this Agreement, he could bear no Superior, and hoped by this to put the only Person out of the way, who was capable of obstructing his ambitious Designs: Brus soon after taking a Journey into the South, probably to settle the Affairs of his Estates in England, and possibly also to concert Measures with his Friends there, Comyn sent up his Part of the Writing to K. Edward, advising him to secure Brus, and thereby prevent further Disturbances in the Kingdom of Scotland.

Upon this, Brus was sent for by the King, who charged him with the Fact, and produced the Writing in Evidence. Brus had no Resource but a hardy Denial; he boldly affirmed the Accusation to be a Contrivance, and the Writing a Forgery, which he undertook to prove, if he might have time till the next Day.

(t) Abercr. I. 568.

This Firmness seems to have stagger'd Edward in his Opinion. He had before felt the Temper of Comyn, and could not think him incapable of Treachery or Contrivance; nor was it difficult to guess at some Reasons Comyn might have to be no cordial Friend to Brus; upon which he consented to the Time desired, and as some say, put the Writing into his hands, the better to enable him to make his Defence.

But the Event of that might have been hazardous. It is probable the Matter was further consider'd in Councel, where it might not be thought proper to take too little Notice of Comyn's Information. The Result seems not to have been much in Favour of Brus; for that Evening, from an unknown Friend, by way of Present or Payment, were sent to him some Pieces of Money, and a Pair of Spurs. (u) 19d

Earl,

Earl, either as one or the other, at that time in England. The printed Copies of Bishop Lesly say, the Presents came a Comite Gloucestrensi, which undoubtedly should be Glovernensi, (x) and Hollingshead in plain English calls him Earl of Gloucester. Abercrombie and Tyrrell attribute the Favour to the Earl of Gloucester his Brother-in-law; (y) but neither was there then, or ever, any Earl of Gloucester so nearly allied to him. His Grandfather married Isabel Daughter of Gilbert the first Earl of Gloucester, of the Clare Family, whose Son Richard and Grandson Gilbert the Red, were dead long before this Incident, and the Son of the last Gilbert was in his Infancy, during whose Minority Ralph de Monthermer, who had married his Mother, K. Edward's Daughter Joan, Relief of Gilbert the Red, enjoyed that Title. He had served with Brus in Scotland, might probably have contracted an Acquaintance with him, and might take this Method to warn his Friend of his Danger, without betraying the King's Counsels.

Which Piece of Service seems to have been gratefully remembred; for about seven Years after Brus had acquired the Crown of Scotland, having taken Monthermer Prisoner at the fatal Battle of

(x) Hollingshead. (y) Tyrrel. Abercr. 569.

Bannocksburn, (where his Son-in-Law then at Age, and Earl of Gloucester, lost his Life among several others of the English Nobility) he generously dismissed him without Ransom, notwithstanding that in the unhappy beginning of his happy Reign, Montbernez had obtained a Grant from K. Edward I. of the Lordship of Anandale, as a forfeited Estate, and having been routed by King Robert in the Field, took Shelter in his Castle of Are, and held it out against him. (z)

The Self-consciousness of Brus helping him to an easy Solution of the Meaning of these Hieroglyphical Presents, he immediately order'd three Horses to be shod backwards, to prevent being traced in the Snow, which was then lying upon the Ground, and with two Servants set out that Night for Scotland.

In Seven Winter Days he reached his Castle of Lochmaban, where he found his Brother Edward Brus, and three or four select Friends, to whom having related his Danger, and consulted their Advice, it was resolved to go together to find out Comyn.

In their way, they happened to discover a new Proof of his Treachery, by meeting a Servant of his, who, (upon (z) Bar. 217. Aberc. 58.

Exa-

Examination) they found was going with Letters to the King of England, which they seized; and hearing by the same Means, that Cormyn was in the Church of the Friars Minors at Dumfries, thither they hasted.

Brus having enter'd the Church singly, reproached Cormyn with his repeated Treacheries; whereupon high Words arising, Brus stabbed him upon the spot, and leaving him for dead, went out of the Church, preparing to take Horse, when James Lindsay and Roger Kilpatrick, two of his Friends, observing some Emotion in his Countenance, and asking what he auld, he told them what he had done, and that he believed Cormyn was dead. Upon which Lindsay, with some Indignation observing, that such Work was not to be done by Halves, went into the Church, and finding Cormyn in some Hopes of Recovery, took care to make an effectual Conclusion.

This was one of those Blows of State which are generally excused by the Great Plea of Necessity. Not only his future Hopes, but the Safety of his Life depended upon it. He look'd upon Cormyn as a Traitor, and was in a Land where having Right to the Sovereignty, he thought himself empower'd to execute Justice. Queen Christina of Sweden, and our Charles the Second, in the last Age, did not scruple to do the like, tho' not by their own Hands, in Countries where they were in the Condition of Subjects, she in France, and he in Cologne; his Title disallowed at home, and hers totally annulled by a voluntary Abdication, and both with less Necessity and lower Provocations, than those by which Brus was urged to this Action.

After the Dispatch of Comyn, he went with what Friends he could rendezvous, to the Castle of Dumfries, where K. Edward's Justices were then sitting, who with their Attendants surrendered at Mercy. Whereupon he generously gave them Safe-conducts to convey them out of the Kingdom.

This Execution was on the 29th of January, as some say, or according to others, upon the 10th of February, in the beginning of the Year 1306. But I wonder any of the Scottish Writers should say, (a) that about the same time Wallace was taken, his Head having been separated from his mangled Limbs above five Months before.

Brus had now pass'd the Rubicon, and having no way left to retreat with Safety, he attempted to go on with Honour, and by the Assistance of his few Friends, with a great Number of the meaner sort, was crowned at Scone the 25th, and again with more Ceremony the 27th of March next following. But his Crown, for some time, proved no better than a Crown of Thorns: For altho' he and his small Band acted with incredible Vigour and Resolution, to the Wonder even of their Enemies; yet by the stronger Force of the English, and the united Vengeance of the numerous and powerful Family of the Comyns, he was so much overmatched, and in his Designs so often defeated, that he was hunted from Place to Place, and forced to lurk in Holes and Corners under all the Extremities of Danger, Hardship, and Want, even of the common Necessaries of Life.

But being then in the 32d Year of his Age, in his full Strength of Mind and Body, of a Constitution and Courage, able to brave these Fatigues and Misfortunes, by such a Man they might have, been easily undergone; but the Loss and Misfortunes of dear Friends and Relations wound the Soul so deep, and his Afflictions of this Kind were so near and numerous, that it is wonderful how any Man capable of the slightest Impressions of Good-nature, should be enabled to go through them,

Edward being now advanced to those Years when Reason in most Men growing weak, the Passions are more apt to predominate, his natural Savageness and Inhumanity were exercised without Mercy and Distinction not only upon all those who were taken in Arms, but upon Surrender, and the greater Part of them butcher'd and mangled in that barbarous manner of which he himself had the Honour to be the Inventor, and which was first by him put in Practice upon David Prince of Wales; (b) but in some ill Times since has been too often used in Case of Treason, or pretended Treason.

In this manner King Robert, in his first Year had the Misfortune to lose not only his three youngest Brothers; hipp'd in the early Bud of their Youth, and all those who were taken with them, murder'd in like manner, but his Brother-in-Law Sir Christopher Seaton, and his dear Friends Sir Simon Frazer, the Earl of Athole, and several others, whose Names remain in History, not to mention those who, by Order of the English Generals, were murdered in cold Blood, after the Battle of Methven, nor several others. It was no small Addition to these Sorrows, that his Wife and Daughter, and two of his Sisters, the Lady Seaton and

Lady

Lady Campbell, with the Countess of Buccleuch, who set the Crown upon his Head, the Bishops of Saint Andrews and Glasgow, and many others of his Friends, were under Confinement in the Hands of his Enemies.

All these he must look upon as Sufferers for his Cause, to the great Aggravation of his Calamities. These were Trials hardly to be supported by the strongest Heart. So that he had Reason to say, as in two Verses which remain of his Composure, that for the Empire of the World he would not undergo what he was moved to for the sake of the ancient Freedom of his Country. Had Edward observed from the Roman History, by what Lenity and Mildness, that gallant People extended and secured their Conquests, that when the Heat of War was over, the People of the submitting Nations were render'd the happier by enjoying the Privileges of Roman Citizens, together with their Native Rights and Liberties; had he acted thus, and not suffer'd his Passion and Revenge to get the better of his Policy, he might have enjoyed his usurped Superiority in what Shape he pleased, and a happy Union of the two Kingdoms might have been accomplish'd about 400 Years before the glorious Reign of our late excellent Queen Anne.

But Edward resolved, that those who dared to oppose him should either die or live in Want and Slavery, which the others were as heartily resolved to prevent, if possible; and so prevalent was Self-defence against an usurping Tyranny, that within a Year after these Misfortunes of King Robert and his Friends, he was able in two successive Engagements to defeat two of Edward's Generals, Valence Earl of Pembroke, and Ralph Montbermer, after which he proceeded with most admirable Constancy and Resolution, till he accomplished the Deliverance of his Country from the Servitude and Oppression of a foreign Yoke, seated himself on a peaceful Throne, and obliged a haughty Enemy by publick Treaties to acknowledge Scotland a Free and Independent Kingdom.

But it ought not to be forgot, that soon after the Defeat of Valence and Montbermer, Edward, big with Resentment and Revenge, was once more preparing to over-run the Kingdom of Scotland, when it pleased God to stop his Carrier

at a small Town called Burgh upon the Sands near the Borders of the two Kingdoms.

Every successful Monarch is crowned with Laurels by our Historians ; but if Courage and Cunning, without Virtue and Honour, may deserve Praise, who knows what Turpin who now infests the Road may merit if he escapes the Gallows ? The Invasion of Edward both upon Wales and Scotland (if God is just) are no more justifiable than Robberies upon the High-way. What can be said then in Excuse of the abominable Cruelties which ensued. I cannot have so much Faith as to believe that they were executed by any heavenly Commission ; and if I allow to that Prince the Courage of a Lion, I must at the same time charge him with the sly, dishonest Subtlety of a Fox, and the Voraciousness and Cruelty of a Wolf.

Having now seen the glorious King Robert the First of Scotland, through numberless Difficulties and Dangers, hardly superable by any one but himself, happily seated on a rightful Throne, for which he was not less obliged to Edward's Schemes of Force and Terror, than to his own Virtue and Title ; I shall prepare to take my Audience of Leave, observing only that the Contrasts of his good good and bad Fortune, like Lights and Shadows in his Picture, add to its Strength and Beauty, and in whatever Point of Sight it is viewed, he still appears the same Great Man.

This Justice I have been the more inclined to do to his Memory, because from Marjory his Daughter, married to Walter, Hereditary High Steward of Scotland, who was descended from the ancient Blood Royal of that Kingdom, is derived the Royal, but much abused, misrepresented Family of the Stewarts. I believe, Sir, you will now think it high time that I should draw to a Conclusion of this tedious Epistle: But before I go hence to be seen no more on these entangled Subjects, as I have taken some Liberty in observing the Mistakes of other Men, I shall be as ready to acknowledge my own, I observe two especially in the printed Copy of my last, (d) one of which is, that the Estate of the Clare Family was increased by an Accession of the Estate of the Earl of Gloucester, and half the Estate of the Family of Marescall and Pembroke; instead of which last, I should have laid, half the Fee of Giffard, and a Fourth Part of the Estate of Marescall, &c.

Also in the Page next before that, it is said, that Earl Richard of Gloucester lived 14 Years after the First Marriage of his Son Gilbert; whereas he died in the Year 1262, (e) which was but Nine Years after that Marriage. I am sure both these stood right in my First Notes; but whether these Mistakes slipped in by my own over-looking, or the Printer's over Haste, I cannot say; but in either case they ought to be rectified.

I was likewise then under some Doubt whether that first Marriage of Earl Gilbert the Red with Alice the Daughter of Guy Earl of Angoulesme, who was then a Child tenerissima etatis, (f) falsely said by Brook to be Widow of John Earl Warren and Surrey, was ever consummated; because I had then found no Account of any Issue from it. I saw none in the Baronage, nor in any of the old Histories which I had looked into; and the whole Estate of Gilbert was said to be settled on the Issue of the second Venter Daughter of K. Ed. i. (g)

Ralph Brook indeed named a Daughter Isabel, born in the First Bed, and afterwards married to Maurice Ed. Berkley; (h) but for this he was reprehended by his Corrector Vincent. (i) However,

I am now inclined to that Opinion, into which I am led by the following Charter.

I have transcribed this Charter as it lies in the Monasticon, because I suspect it has suffered under the slumbering hand of the Compiler of that Work, to which I doubt we are beholden for the thrice-repeated &c. by two of which especially, for want of the Habendum in the first

(k) Mon. 2. 834. (1) Sic. Sic. (2) Grant,

Grant, and Defect in the Date of the second, they are both sensibly maimed; yet how that learned Compiler, notwithstanding the Perpetual Alms, and Isabel's Confirmation for Life, should take the Gift as a single Charity, without any annual Continuance, as he seems to have done in his Baronage, (m) would be strange in any one but him.

The Charter of Confirmation being dated in the second Year of Edward 3d, which was 1328, I cannot find any other Isabel of Clare, who could probably be then living; and that she was married to Maurice Lord Berkley, may (I think) be safely allowed. For as to the Correction made by Vincent, (n) that Isabel the Wife of Maurice Lord Berkley, was natural Daughter to Richard Earl of Cornwall, because K. Hen. the 3d, in a Grant for her Subsistence, calls her his beloved Niece, which Lady Berkley, others say was Sister's Daughter to William de Valence, (o) to whom the King might as well apply the Title of his beloved Niece, her Mother being his uterine Sister, whether she was one or the other, is of no Concern to the present Question, our Isabel of Clare coming long after her in time, and being the second Wife of a later Maurice Lord Berkley; who was Grandson to the Husband of the former Isabel, and died a Prisoner in Wallingford Castle, in the 19th of Edward 2d (1326.) This Dugdale says (p) and his Evidence being corroborated by old Brook, and confirmed by this Charter, I am willing to give more Credit to it, than I should venture to stake upon his Single Reputation.

But as to the cause of the Divorce of Alice the first Wife of Earl Gilbert of Clare, from her Husband, after 20 Years Marriage, which Brook says, (q) was because she fell into a Lunacy, and others say because she attempted to poison him; (r) What Authority there is for either of these Reasons, or how far either of them was sufficient to dissolve the Band of Matrimony, must be left to those who are better able to determine.

And here I cannot but regret the great Want of Dates running thro' the greatest Part of the Charters, Confirmations, and other Instruments copied in the Volumes of the Monasticon, even in the Times when those Tests were in general Use, by which Defects the Truths of History cannot be confirmed, Doubts resolved, or Errors, Falsities, and Forgeries detected; Dates being, since a Multiplicity

(p) Bar. 355. Walsingham 11. Vindicta 223.

(q) Mills 373.

of Witnesses, grew out of Practice, the chief, if not the only, Touchstones of the Validity of those Instruments and their Relatives.

I have also great Reason to suspect that many of the Dates inserted are erroneous and incorrect, of which I shall now only produce one Instance in the Family which I have here made my chief Concern: (5) And that is in a Licence granted by the Lady Elizabeth de Burgo to the Monks of Anglesey to elect their own Priors; which Licence is dated (6) die 1333. 1. Edward 2d. proxima post Festum S. Mathei Apostoli, A. D. 1333. (7) Edward 2d. besides a visible Blunder which may be laid to the Charge of the Printer, or Corrector, and may be remedied by deleting the two first Dates of the Year.) Here is either an Inaccuracy in the Transcriber, or a Forgery in the Original; for if the Year of our Lord be right, it will not agree with any Year of K. Ed. 2d. nor with the first of his Son: And if the Year of the King be right, the Lady was not then capable of giving any such Authority, being both under Age, and under Coverture. (8) The Compiler says the original Instrument is in the Office of Arms, which makes this deformed Blot the more unpardonable,

(5) Moy. 2. 258. 1. (6) Sit. 2. 13. 1. (7) Prob. 1. (8) Potent

able, when he might so easily have cleared it.

Next after this Charter of Licence follows in that Book a Grant of the same Lady to the Monks of Anglesey, of a Rent-charge of Twenty Pounds yearly, for the Maintenance of two Chaplains, to perform daily Devotions there for her Soul, and for the Souls of her Ancestors, and her Heirs, and of all the faithful deceased. This (which the Compiler says is transcribed from an original Indenture in the Augmentation Office) is dated Die Sabbati proxima post Festum Sancti Matthei Apostoli, Anno Regni Regis Ed. IIII, post Conquestum Sexto. In which of these Instruments the Holiday has been mistaken by the Transcribers, might have been judged by Comparison, but most probably this followed close at the Heels of the other.

But I have no Design to meddle further with the Monasticon. I have been so mired in a very small Part of the Bavnage (in which I have endeavoured to keep my Road as much as possible) that I shall not wade into any Examination of the other still more voluminous Work, further than as I may be called by particular Occurrents: In which manner I was indeed drawn into these Remarks upon the Book before me, me, which I shall here break off, leaving the rest to those who have more Leisure, Ability, and Opportunity, there being not one Page in the whole Work but what requires Correction, to make it useful. So that I hope I shall not be justly chargeable with any Want of Charity or good Nature, if I declare my Opinion, that there never was in the Common-wealth of Learning such a Magazine of valuable Materials so maimed and disfigured, so carelessly and injudiciously huddled together, as in Dugdale's Baronage.

And here I hoped with Pleasure to have put an End to your Trouble and my own; but the Printer desiring to fill up some spare Room in his Paper, I beg leave to give (a little Light to some Passages in the Baronage, where I think it is still wanting.

I have several times, in this Letter, taken Notice of the indiscriminate Use made by the Author of that Book, (x) of the Appellation of Teutonicus, with the Surnames of Ties and Teyes; altho' I could see no Reason or Authority for this, yet I was apt to think it could not be so often done without some Foundation, which lay too deep for my Reach. I found in M. Paris the Name of Waleran the German, several times repeated, with no other Addition but Teutonicus, only in f. 290. Walerannus genere Teutonicus, which to me seem'd to point from whence he had that Denomination.

(x) F. 113, 122, 127, 129.

Likewise in a Patent of Ed. I. (already mentioned) he is called Walerandus Teutonicus. (y) So that in these printed Authorities, I could not discover how he should come by the Surnames of Ties and Tey. Therefore, to enquire further, I ventured (tho' an utter Stranger) to offer a Request to Mr. Holmes Keeper of the Records in the Tower, which was favoured by that Gentleman in a most obliging manner, whereby I find, that whereas Dugdale (z) vouches a Record to prove that the Castle of Flamsted was given to Waleran Tey, his Voucher (a) has no such Man; but stands thus --- Dominus Rex commisit Walrando Theuton. Manerium de Flamsted quod fuit Rad. de Thony. So that besides the Misnomer, it may be observed that this Grant was only of a Custody which was undistinguished by the Baronagian.

He has also adopted another Teutonio, named Everard, into the Family of Ties (b) and has married him to the Daughter of John le Viscount, for which he cites

(y) Prynne Hist. Tom. 3. 414. (z) Bar. 470.
(a) Clans. Anno 18. Jobannis, M. 3. (b) Bar. 643.

another Record, (c) whereof the Words are as follow. ---- Ameta uxor Everard. Teutonic. fuit filia predicti Johannis le Viscunte, & haeres ejus propinquior. Nor does the Record of Everard's Homage give him any other Name ---- Rex cepit homagium Eborardi Teutonici qui duxit in uxorem Rametam filiam & haeredem Johannis le Viscont. (d)

What can be said after this? Surely, if either the Name of Ties or Teys (for they are very different) were a proper Translation of the Word Teutonicus, then e converso, we should find those Names Teutonized, when we meet with them in Latin Records. I beg you will accept of some Account of what I have found relating to those Families, in which I shall be as brief as I am able.

To begin with the most ancient, we find one Richard supra Teysam, or sur Teyes, so called from the Settlement of his Ancestors upon the Banks of the River Teyse, by which Cumberland is divided from the Bishoprick of Durham, from whence he was transplanted to the Barony of Gosford in Northumberland, where he lived in great Splendor in the time of King Henry I. (e) tho' he has not been worthy of a Place in the Baronage.

(c) Esr. 29. H. 3. No 45. (d) Claus. 29. H. 3.
M. 2. (e) Cambden in Northumb.

There was afterwards one Randolfe de Teyfa (the Particle before the Name being then changed) he paid a Fine of two Merks to the King in the 30th of Hen. 2. for being restored to his Lands in that County, which he held of the Honour of Vescy, then in the Crown, during the Minority of Eustace de Vescy, after the Death of William his Father. (f)

Long after this, in 27 Edw. 1. (g) there was at his Court, one Walter Teis. He served in Scotland that Year, and made two or three Campaigns there afterwards, in the latter End of that Reign. (h)

His Name also occurs in a general Roll of Proffers of Knights Service taken at Tweedemouth before Bartbolomew de Badlesmere, Deputy Constable of England, and Nicholas de Segrave Mareschal. (i) I am very sorry to find Mr. Maddox, who has given us a Copy or Abstract of this Muster-Roll so positive, that it was made in the 4th of Ed. 1. at which time Badlesmere was hardly out of his Cradle, and Roget Bigod was Mareschal, which Office was not conferr'd upon Segrave till the first Year of Ed. 2d. Nor were many of those named in the Rolls capable of acting in the 4th of Ed. 1. of which I

(f) Bar. Ang. 74. (g) Madd. Exchequer, 456.
(h) Bar. 2. 21. (i) Bar. Ang. 213.

shall only instance one for all, which is Peter de Gavaston, who there proffer'd the Service of Three Knights for the Earldom of Cornwal.

All this might be Oversight, but when the Author unjustly takes this Earl to task for concealing Part of his Service, (k) when his Grant of the Earldom and several other Possessions, in the first Year of his Master's unhappy Reign, was to Hold by the Service of three Knights Fees, (l) 'tis strange that Peter did not stare him in the Face, and rouse him out of his Dream.

For my part, I can fix no Date for this Muster, but in the 4th of Edward 2. Then Walter Ties might make his Proffer for the third Part of a Knight's Fee of the Barony of Bedford. The Marks of his Extraction are worn out by Time; but he married Isabel de Steyngrene (m) Daughter of John de Steyngrene and Ida his Wife, one of the Coheirs of Joan de Beauchampe, Heiress to the last Baron Bedford, whereby she was admitted to a Share of that Barony upon a Partition made about two Years after the imaginary Date of the Muster.

Whether her Daughter Isabel was then born, or not, is uncertain, but she could not be married in several Years

(k) Bar. 216. (l) Rymer To. 3. (m) Bar. 224.
after,

after, when a Part of that Barony might descend to her Husband in her Right. But their Bed seems to have been fruitless; for, at his Death, in 18 Edw. 2. Margaret, the Daughter of his Brother Roger le Ties, was found his next Heir. (n)

This Race being done with, I shall hasten to some of a different Name, and without question a different Family; and here I must gratefully acknowledge a further Obligation to Mr. Holmes for the Notice of one Everard le Tyeis, who was Constable of the Castle of Alnwick, before it was deliver'd by the Royal Mandate in the 10th of K. Henry 3d, to William Son and Heir of Eustace de Vesey who was to marry a Daughter of William Longespee Earl of Salisbury. (o)

That a West-Country-man should be employed on the Borders of Scotland, is no great Wonder; but such he seems to have been: For in the County of Cornwall we are told of one Henry de Tyeis who was Lord of Alwarton and Trewarnail, called by Dugdale, Allerton and Sywarnell. (p) He had a Grant from Richard Earl of Cornwall in the time of Hen. 3. of the Manor of Shireborne in Oxfordshire, and in the next Reign had several Marks of Favour from the Crown;

(n) Ibid. 2. 21.
(p) Bar 2. 21.

(o) Pat. 10. H. 3. M. 5.

but

but dying in the first of Edward 2. he was succeeded by his Son Henry de Tyeis, who served that King several Years with seeming Fidelity, but at length joining in the Rebellion of the Earl of Lancaster, and the Earl with a great Number of his Followers being taken Prisoners at Burrowbridge, several of them were pick'd out for Examples, among which were the Earl himself, Bartholomew de Badlesmere, the Deputy Constable, this Henry Tyeis, and Warine de l' Isle, who married Alice his Sister and Heir. The Earl lost his Head at Pomfret, Warine was hanged there, Badlesmere at Canterbury, and Henry de Tyeis at London.

Such was the fatal Period of this Family, who have been constantly robbed by the Baronagian of one Letter of their Names. Now, if any of these Persons could be found by the Name of Teutonicus, some of them, besides what is contained in the Vouchers above being named in several Records printed by Rymer and Maddox, I might with Difficulty be persuaded to think, that Teutonicus might be synonimous with some of them; but as the contrary of this always appears, I must continue to think that the Baronagian hath not only in a most gross and absurd manner abused his Author M. Paris, but notoriously falsified the Records cords produced to support himself and his Assertions upon these, as well as many other Occasions; and so I shall take my Leave of him, but still continue to be,

 SIR, &c.

P. S. As it is next to impossible, in these intricate and thorny Ways, always to keep a direct Course, I shall be obliged to the Hand which points wheresoever I have erred.

These are the Errors of the Printer; but I doubt there may be some of my own which stand more in need of Correction, of which having yet found only one, I shall endeavour to rectify it here before the Book goes too far out of my Hands.

It is said in fol. 153. That Roger Earl of Norfolk succeeded to the Office of Mareschal after the Death of his Mother Anno 1248. Dugdale had proved from a Record (a) that she was invested in that Office, An. 30. H. 3. (1246.) It appeared by her Grant to the Nuns of Thetford, that she used the Stile of Mareschal, and finding nothing to the contrary, I concluded she held it to her Death.

But this was too hasty a Conclusion; for I have since found, that in the 31. of H. 3. (1247.) she committed the Mareschal's Rod to the Earl with the King's Licence; that his Writ to the Exchequer for his Appointments, and the Admission of his Deputy was recorded as of Michaelmas Term in that Year, was allowed in that Court the 4th of February next following, and his Deputy John de Neville Clerk then admitted. (b)

By this it seems to me, that his Mother held the Office about a Year and half from the beginning of the Year 1246, till after Michaelmas 1247, when the Infirmitie of old Age might induce her to resign, in order to a better Preparation for her End, which happen'd in the Year next following. But what can be urged in Excuse for the Author of the Baronage, who has solemnly put the Mareschal's
Rod into her Hands in the Year of her Death, when she had before resigned it?
And to prove this solemn Falshood, abuses the Record which he had cited before to a contrary Purpose, forcing the dead Letter to contradict itself, and impose Contradictions on the Faith of his Readers. (c)
